By Ruth Lenore Fisher

A NOTED and also very interesting visitor in Salem is Fred Webster of Chicago, who is internationally known as a prominent and miniature painter. He has come to Salem to be here some time doing several important commissions in this city and in Portland. Mr. Webster has visited Salem before and his work is quite well known to Salem folk. He will be remembered as the artist who painted three portraits of the late Asahel Bush, one of which hangs in the bank, and is familiar to many Salem folk. Mr. Webster is a frequent visitor to the coast, where he has formed many friendships. Mr. Webster tells of his first impressions when he came to Oregon, and says that he, like many other easterners thought there was nothing west of the Mississippi river, but when he arrived here and found how very modern everything is, he was much impressed. He especially likes the cordiality of the west and the absence from so much formality. Mr. Webster says he likes to paint here very much because of the natural background for his paintings which is so abundant here and is so seldom found in the densely populated eastern cities. During his presence in the city he has been entertained by Mr. and Mrs. R. Monroe Gilbert at their country home, "Irokozan," south of Salem. While in Salem for several weeks Mr. Webster is domiciled at the Hotel Marion.

Mrs. R. E. Lee Steiner and her daughter, Mrs. Earle Coulson Flegel are back in Salem for a short stay from Neskowin before returning for the summer.

A group of prominent golfers of the Illabe club are leaving today for Astoria to be the guests of the Astoria Golf club over the week-end and to play golf with them at Astoria and also at Seaside. Among those who will go are Sak Kozier.

"It certainly is," replied the clerk.
