REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

The Story of a Honeymoon

A Wonderful Romance of Married Life Wonderfully Told by ADELE GARRISON.

CHAPTER 647

WHAT LILLIAN ASKED MADGE WHEN THEY MET TO CONFER.

Lillian greeted me quietly enough as I came into her library. But the little white lines around her mouth betrayed the anxiety under which she was laboring.

"What, luck?" she asked, as she gave the tea signal on her wall bell to Betty in the regions below.

"The best," I answered promptly. "I saw him this morning and lunched with him."

"The pupils of her eyes narrowed ever so slightly, a sure sign of excitement with Lillian.

"Good girl!" she said approvingly. "I know that wasn't an easy thing for you to do. Tell me all about it, but keep your voice down. Luckily Betty isn't what you would call a velvet-shod servant. We shall hear her coming long before she's here. And Katherine is with Mother Morton and Marion."

"She drew a chair close to her own, and bending down stirred the crackling wood of the fire which her friends always count on finding in her home until the hot days of the real summer make it a discomfort instead of a pleasure.

"These old-fashioned stone houses are always chilly in the late afternoon when the heating plants aren't going," she said as she once in explanation of her hobby.

"I'm very glad they are," I had returned. "If it gives a pretext for an open fire," and her smile of comprehension had cemented our comradely liking for the "heart and hearth of the house."

"How did he look?"

"Mr. Underwood came to the library shortly after I arrived there," I began.

"How did he look?" Lillian interrupted. "Prosperous or shabby? Had he been drinking?"

"Forgive the interruptions, Madge, but it is vitally necessary that I know these things. Harry is always a walking barometer of his condition."

"He appeared decidedly prosperous," I answered, remembering the roll of bills from which he had taken the one he had bestowed upon the little waitress. "And I don't think he had been drinking any more than—"

"I stopped in embarrassment. "That he generally does," Lillian finished coolly. "H—m! I don't know whether I like that report or not. If he's not drinking more than usual he knows exactly what he's doing, and if he's prosperous it may mean his name is on that happy roll. For I happen to know there's nothing doing among the old enterprises which used to provide him with funds."

"I had a shrewd suspicion that prominent among the enterprises which used to provide him with funds" was Lillian's own purse. But that was in no possible sense my affair, so I hastened to continue my story.

Lillian is insistent. Beginning at my discovery that Grace Draper had accompanied him to the door of the theatrical exhibit, I told Lillian everything that had occurred, including our luncheon at the Fleur de Lis tea room, and the unexpected entrance there of Dicky and Edith Fairfax. I conscientiously tried, however, to eliminate wholly my own impressions of Mr. Underwood and his actions. I meant that Lillian should get the real news of my little expedition under her direction, leaving the details until she called for them.

"She listened attentively and without interruption until I had finished. Then she said quietly: "And now I want the real meat of the thing."

"What do you mean?" I stammered, almost upsetting my cup of tea under the searching regard of her wonderful eyes. Betty had brought up the tea service while I was in the middle of my story, and we had talked of immaterial things until she had gone downstairs again.

"What do you really think about him?" Lillian returned. "Does Grace Draper seem to have any hold on him? What is his attitude toward you? And what do you think is his real reason for mixing up in this thing?"

"His attitude toward Grace Draper reminded me of that of a business man toward a partner whom he disliked and to get rid of whom he was only awaiting an opportunity," I replied slowly. It was that idea which had struck me when I overheard the conversation of the two outside the door of the library.

"I thought so," Lillian returned, with a note of satisfaction in her voice. "Now for the other questions. Is Harry as much in love with you as ever?"

"She looked at me shrewdly, and I struggle as I couldn't control the flush that covered my face. "That's unkind of me, I know," Lillian said, "but I wanted to be sure. You needn't answer. I can see he is, for which his particular devil he praised."

"And now for the last and most important query of all. Did that half-clairvoyant intuition of yours get any line on what is behind his belonging to that gang?"

"I wanted, oh, so sorely, to give her an evasive answer, for the solution which had flashed upon my brain in the closing minutes of my interview with Harry Underwood seemed particularly concealed, so I braced myself to give her the answer she awaited."

SALEM HAS ONE OF BEST BOXING ARENAS IN WEST, FANS DECLARE

VIEW OF STADIUM WHERE BOXING MATCHES WILL BE HELD.

Boxers who are to participate in the bouts at the state fair stadium Friday night as part of the Elks' consolation program will have the advantage of what is declared to be one of the best arenas west of Chicago. The boxers themselves have had a look at the big stadium and agree that this is true.

The Elks have had the interior of the building built up into a sloping seating arrangement capable of accommodating 7,000 persons, and indications are that most of the seats will be filled.

Most of the boxers have arrived in the city and are ready for their respective matches. Those who have been here for several days have undergone daily training at the armory, and those who have not arrived until more recently have been training in other cities. Gordon Francis, well known Oregon athlete, will referee the bouts.

One of the boxers who is receiving most attention here is Alex Trambitas, Portland boy, who is to meet Johnny McCarthy of San Francisco. Announcement was made last night that Trambitas has been matched to meet Travis Davis in Seattle on the night of July 28, the boys to weigh in at 147 pounds at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Davis has just won a decision over Johnnie McCarthy. Trambitas and Davis boxed December 16 last in Seattle when Trambitas was a newspaper decision. McCarthy arrived in town yesterday and worked out at the armory.

One of the boys of widest repute to appear Friday night is Joe Gorman who goes up against Earl Baird in the featherweight class.

Pugy Morton has aroused a lot of interest since he arrived here a few days ago. The fans like his action and are interested in his match with Eddie Shannon, who has an equal number of friends in Salem.

Shannon is working out with Carl Martin who is to meet Earl Zimmerman in a four-round preliminary. Another four-round go will be between Carl Miller and Frankie Crites. The latter is a Newberg boy.

TENNIS MATCHES ARE THRILLERS

Several Gruelling Battles Seen in Willamette Valley Tournament

No one who went out to see the matches in the Willamette Valley Tennis tournament at the Asylum avenue courts yesterday came home without witnessing some gruelling battles between the various players.

Perhaps the closest match of the day was in the men's doubles between McDougal and Palmer and Doney and Lantis. Both teams played brilliant tennis at times and when they proved a bitter-ender was the one between Gabrielson and Young against Glayser and Thompson. It took three hard sets to decide the victors. Gabrielson and Young finally winning 3-6, 6-4, 6-4.

Miss Hayner, University of Washington star, and Knickerbocker put up a great match in mixed doubles against Marjorie Kay and Palmer. The latter team won the first set handily 6-2 but slowed up in the second set and lost after many long rallies, 6-7. In the final set, however, the local stars got on their toes again and won the set and match 6-2.

Joy sprung a surprise in his singles match against McDougal when he proved the Salem veteran to be a standstill in the second set. Joy tied the set at 5 all, 6 all and 7 all, but couldn't go any further and McDougal won 6-1, 9-7.

The results of yesterday's play follow: Joy beat Seley 7-5, 6-3. McDougal beat Joy 6-1, 9-7. Thielsen and Harbison beat Joy and Seley 6-4, 8-6.

Palmer beat Hofer by default. Lantis beat Lugbill by default. Miss Kay beat Mrs. Jacobs by default.

Doney and Lantis vs. Crawford and Dinse by default. Gabrielson and Young beat Glayser and Thompson 3-6, 6-4, 6-3.

Miss Kay and Palmer beat Miss Hayner and Knickerbocker 6-2, 7-9, 6-2.

Bates and Knickerbocker beat Young and Gabrielson 6-3, 6-2.

McDougal and Palmer beat Lantis and Doney 6-3, 2-6, 6-4.

Today's events will feature the women's matches. Miss Irene Campbell, former state champion, will be seen in action three times and Miss Agnes McBride of Portland will also make her first appearance on the courts. Tea and punch will be served by the women of the club. The public is invited to see the matches, the admission to which is free.

Yesterday was the last day for the filing of negative arguments on initiative measures that will go before the people at the election in November. Two negative arguments were filed yesterday against the proposed 4 per cent initiative measure, one by the Oregon State Bankers' association and another by M. L. Jones of Brooks. COCONUT OIL FINE For Washing Hair

If you want to keep your hair in good condition, be careful what you wash it with.

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and is very harmful. Mulsified coconut oil shampoo (which is pure and entirely greaseless), is much better than anything else you can use for shampooing, as this can't possibly injure the hair.

Simply moisten your hair with water and rub it in. One or two teaspoonfuls will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather, and cleanses the hair and scalp thoroughly. The lather rinses out easily, and removes every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves it fine and silky, bright, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get Mulsified coconut oil shampoo at most any drug store. It is very cheap, and a few ounces is enough to last everyone in the family for months.
