

SOLDIERS WRITE BOOKS ON WAR

Valuable List Is Placed on Shelves of the Oregon State Library

Twenty-five volumes of manuscript copies of books and booklets that have been written by soldiers and others mainly about western regiments, divisions or units that participated in the war have been received by the state library.

sent to the American legion a report of the works which she deems of inestimable value. In addition there have been received numerous cartoons, pictures and photographs and illustrated stories of the war. Miss Marvin is anxious to obtain copies of two volumes which apparently were published only in limited numbers and which she is unable to find. These are "Story of the 91st," published in San Mateo, Calif., by the 91st Division Publishing company and "History of the 66th F. A. Brigade," published in Denver. A list of divisional, regimental and company histories, diaries and letters received follows: "Base Hospital No. 9, A. E. F." California District to Use Oregon Water

Application for the appropriation of 1500 second feet of water from the Klamath river near Keno has been filed with the state engineering department by the Klamath-Shasta valley irrigation district of California. The application doubtless will be granted since it is proposed to use surplus water after Oregon projects have been supplied. The development of 110,000 horsepower is part of the plan. The project embraces 150,000 acres.

Parcel Post Mailing Requires Greater Care

Parcels containing automobile and bicycle tires, handbags, machinery parts and suit cases will not be accepted at the postoffice in the future with an insurance guarantee or for safe delivery unless there are attached two tags containing the names of the sender and the consignee on each tag, was the announcement made by Postmaster August Hucklestein yesterday. He made the announcement following receipt of a bulletin from the postoffice department. Where practicable the department suggests that a tag be placed inside the package with the name of the sender and the address written in legible writing; also the name and address of the person to whom the package is sent. After the package is wrapped another tag similar to the one on the inside must be appended on the exterior of the package. According to the bulletin received by the local postmaster, when the recommendations of the department have been observed the insurance for loss and for safe delivery will be extended to patrons. The postal authorities have made this ruling following many reports and complaints received by them of articles lost while in transit because the tags have been torn off in handling. Frequently machinery parts are sent through the mails without being wrapped, having the address only on a small tag. Articles mailed in this manner, according to the bulletin, the postmasters are not obliged to accept. They may be accepted when the sender waives the rights for a claim against loss.

Technical Volumes Are Received at Library

The American Library association, war library service, has sent to the Oregon state library 1000 technical volumes as the second installment of 6000 technical books to be received by this state from the war camp libraries that were maintained during the war. The books will be distributed to libraries throughout Oregon. The distribution will be on a basis of service, the books going to those libraries that are most effective in their general work and that did the most effective work during the war. The books deal largely with engineering subjects. Some on technical educational subjects have been sent to Oregon Normal school at Monmouth. The other volumes are being distributed among the libraries at Albany, Astland, Bandon, Hood River, La Grande, Salem, The Dalles, Bend, Pendleton and Ontario.

Model Libraries Will Enlighten Oregonians

A new departure in library work, and one that has had its inception in Oregon is the sending of model libraries into rural communities that do not have library advantages. The model libraries will be maintained for a short time at each place as an educational method to teach the value and use of libraries. The idea was tried out at the Gladstone chautauqua where for two weeks a model village library was maintained in charge of a trained librarian. As a result, Miss Cornelia Marvin, state librarian, has received a number of requests for traveling libraries and the directors of the Gladstone chautauqua have announced their intention of building a permanent library structure on the Chautauqua grounds. The state library has received a shipment of 2000 volumes for the traveling county libraries. The traveling system now has about 700 stations in the state.

Librarian Shortage Is Acute in This State

There is an acute shortage of librarians in Oregon. For a month Miss Cornelia Marvin, state librarian, has had on hand a list of eight positions in the state that need filling, including three heads of county libraries and other important posts. But the librarians are leaving. Some are going into library work in other states because the salaries are better than are paid in Oregon, and some are leaving the library profession for other better-paying occupations. The shortage is said to prevail throughout the northwest.

BITS FOR BREAKFAST

Seasonable weather. Good old summer time. The farmers of the Salem section must be well supplied with help this year. Outside of flax pullers, no farmers have asked City Recorder Race for help this whole season. Franklin D'Olier, national commander of the American legion, who will be in Salem Monday, will find a loyal bunch in this city and section. Marion and Polk counties will never have to feel ashamed of their record in the great war.

The colored men of Salem all celebrated Emancipation day on Wednesday, the 4th. The Bits for Breakfast man tried to find out where they got that date. Two of the best United States histories agree that it was on September 22, 1862, that President Lincoln read his Emancipation proclamation to his cabinet, and made it public; to take effect on January 1, 1863. He had talked about it in March, May and July, and he had urged upon congress the importance of remunerating the slaveholders. A colored man in Salem told the Bits for Breakfast man yesterday that President Lincoln wrote the document on August 4, and that is the reason why the members of that race all over the United States celebrate that date; it is the Fourth of July for them; or rather a second Fourth of July. If there is a reader of this paragraph who can throw any light on the matter, The Statesman will be glad to print it. Johnson's Cyclopaedia, of which Charles A. Dana was editor, gives the date of the emancipation proclamation as September 22.

Highway Now Open—According to an announcement made last night the Pacific highway between Portland and Salem is now paved as far as Aurora. Only four and two-tenths miles remain to be paved at this place. This is expected to be completed in the near future.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANTS

SOMETIMES one doesn't stop and think or realize that he has high class accountants and bookkeepers working for him who are not entered upon his payroll at all.

They're over here at the United States National—counting the customers's money when he brings it in, keeping account of it and paying it out as he may order.
