LARGE SUM OF MONEY IS SPENT BY UNIVERSITY

Willamette university is becoming an increasing factor in the business life of the city. The campaign for funds has been progressing quietly for several months and the residents of Salem have responded readily showing that there is a keen appreciation throughout the city of the benefits accruing from Oregon's oldest educational institution.

Of the $100,000 to be raised for the new buildings, Salem was asked to contribute $20,000 and four-fifths of this amount already has been pledged. When this total has been reached, the committee plans to publish a list of contributors in order that proper credit and recognition may be given them.

Many people do not realize to what proportions the university is growing, but it is surely no small thing for the community to have $150,000 put into brick and mortar and labor during this year. Last week Mrs. Bush and Mrs. Kirk, the committee on furnishing the new Lausanne hall placed the largest order ever given in Salem for furniture, the total being between $10,000 and $15,000.

The university adds four new members to its faculty this year and looks forward to a student body numbering not less than 550.

Lausanne hall will accommodate 125 girls and from present indications the building will be filled to overflowing the first year.

Every day inquiry is coming from people who are looking to Salem as a place for home building because of the splendid educational advantages offered. It bespeaks the business men and residents to encourage and to support handsomely the public schools and the university.

STOKER KEPT ON SHIPBOARD
Man Claiming to be American Citizen Not Allowed to Land

SYDNEY, Australia, Aug. 5.—Unless Reginald Harkins, ship fireman, who described himself as an American citizen, was allowed to land from the Canadian-Australian liner Makura when that vessel reached Vancouver upon her last voyage from here to that port, or he managed to land somewhere en route, he runs the risk of being carted up and down the Pacific indefinitely.

Harkins' account of himself, given in Sydney just before the Makura sailed from here early in June with him on board, as follows:

"Back in January a man with the same name as I reached Vancouver on this boat. He asked for a day off but the chief engineer refused him. He went ashore without leave, got into a street fight, had his leg broken and was taken to a hospital. The chief engineer reported him a deserter. The Canadian authorities arrested me as being the Reginald Harkins who had deserted.

"They put me on board the liner Niagara bound for Sydney. I didn't want to go, so when the steamer reached Honolulu I left her. At the instigation of the Union Steamship company, agents for the Canadian-Australian boats, the immigration authorities at Honolulu arrested me and forcibly put me on board the Makura. Not wanting to be idle I signed on as a stoker from Honolulu. I worked on at $14 sterling a month. When I reached here I couldn't get my money and the Canadian authorities wouldn't let me off the ship.

"I was born in Omaha, Neb., 42 years ago. I left America when I was 7 years old. I came to Australia and stayed here until I was 25. Since then I have traveled about the world in ships. When I was brought on board this boat (the Makura) at Honolulu, the chief engineer and the purser admitted that I was not the man who went off the boat at Vancouver, but in spite of all that, the captain took me out to sea."

Harkins complained further that on the strength of promises by the custom authorities at Sydney that he would be released from detention on the Makura if he signed a certificate that he was an alien. He signed the paper but the promise was not kept. The American consul here, E. J. Norton, took up Harkins' case, but was unable to do anything on the man's behalf because of lack of proper proof of American citizenship.

"The whole thing," he said, "goes back to the action of the Canadian authorities."

British To Improve Harbors of Jamaica

KINGSTON, Jamaica, Aug. 5.—The estimates which have just passed the British house of commons provide for an expenditure by the Imperial government of $500,000 to equip Kingston harbor with an oil and coaling station for British naval and mercantile ships.

A large strip of land at the eastern end of the harbor has been acquired for a quay and works now in progress. An army and navy cadet under the auspices of the imperial government has also been established and everything is being done to attract vessels passing through the Panama canal.

The local government's scheme of harbor improvements has been referred to a special board of experts. It is intended to dredge the harbor whereby vessels with a draught of 38 feet will be able to enter without fear of getting stuck in mud banks. On account of the shallowness of certain parts of the channel, the battleship Renown which is bringing the Prince of Wales here in September next will have to anchor at Port Royal, five miles outside Kingston.
