CHAPTER 573

WHY MADGE FELT ALMOST SHAKEN BY MRS. DURKEE'S STORY.

"Say that over again," I demanded excitedly, and then bit my lip in exasperation as the slip I had made.

"What do you mean?" she asked.

I reflected quickly. There was but one thing to be done, to tell the truth, or something near it, in an off-hand manner so she'd think nothing more of the incident. I knew better than to make a mystery of anything, which my inquisitive little neighbor could ponder.

"I like to hear you describe once more that man who wishes to rent your house," I replied, desiring to gain time to arrange my story.

"He was a handsome, foreign Spanish-looking chap, with mustaches and a pointed beard," she returned, "but why do you ask?"

She was full of excited curiosity and again I mentally anathematized my careless tongue.

"Because I saw a man like that the other day, and thought, as you did, that I had seen eyes like his before. He gave me the same impression of having known him, but, of course, we were both mistaken."

I strove to make my voice as careless and matter of fact as possible in the vain hope that Mrs. Durkee would drop the subject. But she was like an active little ferret on the trail of a rat.

"How perfectly thrilling!" she said. "Madge, mark my word, he's somebody we know or in disguise. Where did you see him?"

"How perfectly ridiculous!" I retorted, a bit tartly, for her suggestion startled me in spite of its utter absurdity. "I only caught a glimpse of the man on the street but his unusual appearance, and an impression of recognition in his eyes stayed in my memory, to be brought out by your description. But let's not waste our time over anything so absurd. Tell me about your interview with this handsome, mysterious stranger."

"Twice the amount."

Mrs. Durkee shook her pretty head sagely.

"You'll see!" she predicted darkly. "And just wait till you hear the rest of my story. I'm sorry I rented my house to them now, even if they did give me twice the money I asked. There's some mischief afoot I'll be bound. But I can't get out of it now. I've taken the money and have signed a lease for the season."

"Twice the amount of money you asked!" I exclaimed, for she had really startled me this time. "Suppose you begin at the beginning and tell me all about it."

"Well, as I told you, I went to the hotel they named in their letter and found this man. He explained that his uncle was an elderly invalid, come to the north in search of health and quiet, and that they had but one servant, a Japanese. He asked two or three questions about the house, but seemed to take everything for granted. I had a queer feeling almost as if he knew about the place beforehand. Then he asked my price, and when I told him $400 furnished for the season he bowed in a most captivating foreign fashion, and said:

"Madame, I am going to do an unusual thing. I am going to offer you twice the amount that you named."

"I know I stared at him as if I thought he had suddenly lost his mind. And then he smiled in an amused sort of way, although I could see he was a bit anxious for all his smiling, and said in a quick, short way:

"I am doing this because for various reasons; I do not wish to give you the usual references."

Cause For Reflection.

"Well, Madge, you can imagine I was flabbergasted. But he hadn't given me a chance to say anything, just went on talking."

"But I can assure you, madame, you do not need to have the least uneasiness," he said in a way that would have made any woman believe in him. My uncle is exceedingly nervous, and he has many friends who would insist on coming to see him if they knew he were near New York. And then there are grave business reasons why we do not wish our presence known here for some weeks at least. If you do not think twice the amount you named is enough I am prepared to offer more. We are at your mercy," and he bowed again.

"I don't know how he did it," Mrs. Durkee said reminiscently. "He must have been mighty clever, but do you know that man made me feel that I would be a cruel, mercenary wretch to ask for references or even more money. I not only agreed to rent him the place furnished without references, but I made a feeble little protest against taking the sum he'd named."

"But I hope not too strong a protest," I smiled, for my little friend's naivete was delicious.

Mrs. Durkee dimpled.

"Well, he didn't have to force the money into my hands," she admitted. "And what do you think? He paid me in advance! And had the lease already for me to sign!"

"Doesn't that look to you as though he's somebody in disguise who really knows me?"

"You ridiculous romancer!" I evaded, kissing her.

"But her story had given me much cause for reflection—deep thought. (To be continued)

Forest Fires in Polk Country Under Control

DALLAS, Or., Aug. 19.—(Special to The Statesman)—The forest fires in the timbered section of western Polk county are all under control of the fire fighters. Large crews have been fighting the flames to keep them from spreading for the past several days. The fires have been so far confined to burned or logged-over areas and in no cases have they gotten beyond control of the patrolmen and reached green timber.

The fire situation in the Black Rock logging district was so critical the first of the week that the logging companies feared a repetition of the big fire of 1910 which destroyed many thousands of acres of standing timber, shut down their camps and turned the men over to the Western Forester for fire fighting purposes.

One of the three fires in this county on the site of the old Dryan & Lucas mill above Falls City is believed to have been set by a cigarette or a cigar stub thrown from an automobile by passing tourists. There is no mill on this property and no one had been seen near it the day the fire started.

Don't Spoil Your Hair By Washing It

When you wash your hair, be careful what you use. Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali, which is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle.

The best thing to use is Multisud coconut oil shampoo, for this is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very cheap and beads anything else all to pieces. You can get this at any drug store, and a few ounces will last the whole family for months.

Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly, and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy and easy to handle. Besides, it loosens and takes out every particle of dust, dirt and dandruff.
