OREGON'S ONE VOTE MAY BE NEEDED.

The election of the United States Senator is not a personal matter, nor entirely a state matter, but it is largely a matter of national concern. The reasons why a Republican United States Senator should be elected in Oregon are these:

The voters of the nation will undoubtedly elect Warren G. Harding, a Republican, president. The political complexion of the United States Senator will be decided at this election. The contest between the Republicans and Democrats is very close.

Prominent Republican Senators like Wadsworth of New York, Brandegee of Connecticut, Smoot of Utah, Watson of Indiana, are being subjected to bitter attacks. Factional fights in Illinois endanger the election of a Republican Senator. The Republicans now have a margin of only one vote. La Follette of Wisconsin cannot be relied upon to vote regularly with the Republicans.

Oregon's one vote may be needed to save the Republican majority.

If the Senate is in the control of the Democrats, the hands of Warren G. Harding as President will be tied. Senator McNary of Oregon will be thrown out as chairman of the irrigation committee, the most important of all to Oregon with its millions of acres of undeveloped land. All Senate committees will be controlled by Democrats.

It will mean that Republican policies, Republican reforms, Republican protective tariff for our agricultural products, our lumber, our livestock, our manufactures will go by the boards.

The Republican standard bearers—Harding and Coolidge—ask the Oregon voters to do their duty by sending a Republican Senator and Republican Congressman to Washington.

A vote for Harding should be accompanied by a vote for a Republican United States Senator to uphold the hands of the Republican President.

William J. Bryan asserts that he is still a Democrat, but not for Cox for President. He says that at San Francisco the Constitution and the Ten Commandments were traded

"for a glass of beer." That doesn't sound much like the silence of the grave. Bryan's is another voice in the air that must worry Jimcox.

President Wilson says that he feels "that the very honor and destiny of the nation are involved in this campaign." They are. Maine realized it. The country realizes it.

The Supreme Court of Maine has decreed that a woman need not tell her age in order to vote. The recent returns from the Pine Tree state showed that those who cast their ballots were fully old enough to vote.

Cox is seeing things again. This time it's a newspaper conspiracy to keep him out of the limelight. The fact is that the Republican press rejoices at the opportunity to exploit his utterances. It is publicity that has ruined what little chance Cox had for success.

Some one has asked: Why handcuff Harding? This calls attention to a striking way to the inconsistency of Republicans electing a Democratic United States senator.

The primary is sound in argument, but in effect it falls down. If it fails to provide the fulfillment of the wishes of the people it is a failure, and that is its fate. A reversal to the old convention, even if they were not perfect, is a step in the right direction.—Hartford Courant.

Even Cox must be appalled by the futility of his speeches. No matter what he may say, nor how loud he may shout, he cannot change the country's stubborn determination to wrest the government from the hands of bungling Democrats. Handicapped by the Wilson performances, Cox cannot possibly win.—Baltimore American.

The Republicans in Oregon are united this year. There are no factional troubles. Senator McNary, Congressman Hawley, Sinnott and McArthur are all loyally supporting Robert N. Stanfield, the Republican nominee for United States senator. They realize how important it is for the Republican party to control the United States senate.

For the first time since the "16-to-1" campaigns of Bryan there is an organized movement in Democratic ranks in support of a Republican candidate. Just as there were "Honest Money" Democratic clubs that supported McKinley, so there are Harding Democratic clubs giving aid, comfort and support to the Republican standard bearer in this campaign. The break in the Democratic ranks has come over the League of Nations. The number in the party who refuse to stand with the president for ratification of the treaty and covenant without reservations is legion. If they are the less Democratic for this, they are the more democratic for it.—Buffalo News.

Oregon is a sound Republican state. The Republican registration, up to a short time ago, was 228,571; Democrats, 93,405. There are more than 155,166 more Republicans than Democrats in the state of Oregon. It is therefore folly to say that a Republican United States senator cannot be elected in the state of Oregon. When Oregon Republicans realize that a Republican president needs the support of a Republican United States senator, that Oregon may be the state to throw control of the senate in the hands of the Democratic party, Oregon Republicans are going to the polls and do their duty by voting for Robert N. Stanfield for United States senator. A vote for Harding without a vote for Stanfield is only 50 per cent efficient.

A STRONGHOLD.

Just now Chairman Hays of the Republican national committee is further boosting the fame of Castle Hill, Me. The name sounds like a stronghold of some kind, and it is.

In the election last month Castle Hill cast 101 votes and 100 of them were for the Republican ticket. The Democratic atmosphere is supposed to be the only man who was able to hold out against the grand old party. Castle Hill is certainly a stronghold, and it comes as near being 100 per cent Republican as they can ever be expected to get.

THE PAPER AGE.

It is a fine thing that Salem has gotten into the paper game.

They are making so many things out of paper that it has become important to disclose fresh material from which paper may be made, and the United States is spending a big appropriation in hunting for new materials. Paper can be manufactured from cornstalks and from the waste of the cotton and sugar plantations. It may be made from some of our luxuriant weeds.

Now that they are making our houses, our hats, our shoes and our clothing out of paper, the various brands and grades of the aforesaid paper will concern people.

The paper that the Germans use in making a suit of clothes is not the same as is used for paper napkins. Neither is the paper and strawboard used in building homes suitable to wrap the butter in.

The paper house is coming to be a fact in some cities, and may be valuable in easing the problems incident to furnishing homes for the many. Most of the strawboard and paper-for-home building is treated with liquid asphaltum, which gives it strength and resistance and helps defy the elements.

The paper house is a great improvement over the air castle. It will keep out the rain and can even be made almost burglar-proof. It is built in one-third the time it takes to build a frame house, and it costs about one-third the money. There you have speed and economy in solving the house problem.

The home should have foundation sills and studding of lumber and then it can be converted into a frame house at any time. But with the frame of a house can easily be finished in a week, even to the bathroom and electrical fixtures. It is claimed that a five-room house built in regular bungalow style and suitably painted and decorated can be put up for less than $2000. Treated with mineral paint it is almost fireproof, and it is fit to resist the rigors of an Oregon climate. Possibly a Kansas cyclone or a Dakota blizzard would raise havoc with them, but they stand up fine against a gentle Weebfoot mist. If a man can build him a paper house in a week he can show much independence in the presence of the lumber dealer. The awmill man says that the price of lumber cannot possibly be lowered much. Tell him to go chase himself, and build a paper home in which to have the wife and the can opener.

This is surely the paper age—and Salem is right in the swim.

A RARE REALITY.

Today we picture a steaming, gleaming ear of Golden Bantam corn, fresh from the pot, its luster enhanced by a bit of butter, its savor made piquant by a dash of salt and—for those who like it—pepper. The very thought tickles the palate. It is more than food. It is an inspiration. It makes us forget the Red terror, the political campaign, the high cost of living and cling to life and to our daily task for another week, when it may become a reality.

Such realities are rare. When one tastes the season's first ear of Golden Bantam corn, fresh from the pot—steamed, not boiled—one's attitude toward life is subject to change. The ordinary physical processes suddenly take on new importance. The business of fueling the human furnace becomes a pleasure. Faces across the table, bisected as they are by ears of Golden Bantam corn, take on new significance. They are a product of the corn, full of health, full of strength, full of life, full of possibilities for good, and soon to be full of corn.—Chicago Tribune.

QUICK ACTION.

They seem to change their presidents in France about as easily as they change their wives in this country. No tiresome campaign—nothing much but a putting off of the old and putting on the new.

CAMPAIGN FUNDS.

Senator Reed is going to spend his time and energy on the passing of a bill which will limit the expenditures of any national campaign committee to $500,000. This is a gratuitous insult to the women of America. Just as they are being admitted into full political partnership the resources of the national committee are to be cut down until there is hardly enough to supply talcum powder for the headquarters' annex. Half a million dollars will hardly keep the national committee in soda water. There are over thirty million voters in the country and it would cost more than a million dollars to send a circular to each one of them. To leave the national committee without spending-money would be a slam at the lady members. Watch your trousers.—Los Angeles Times.

NOTABLE DAYS.

There is a widespread desire to make a legal holiday of November 11th—which was first known as Armistice day and is now desired to be known as American Legion day. Why not move Thanksgiving up a couple of weeks and consolidate the two? They would go well together and we are not impoverished for holidays.

BITS FOR BREAKFAST

Pity the prune men. They are playing in hard luck against a teary old Jupiter Pluvius.

All the prune packers are still yelling for more help; and their case is urgent. More men and women are needed to help save the prunes.

You must register today or tomorrow, if you want to vote—if you have not already registered.

It was a big day at the fair after all—

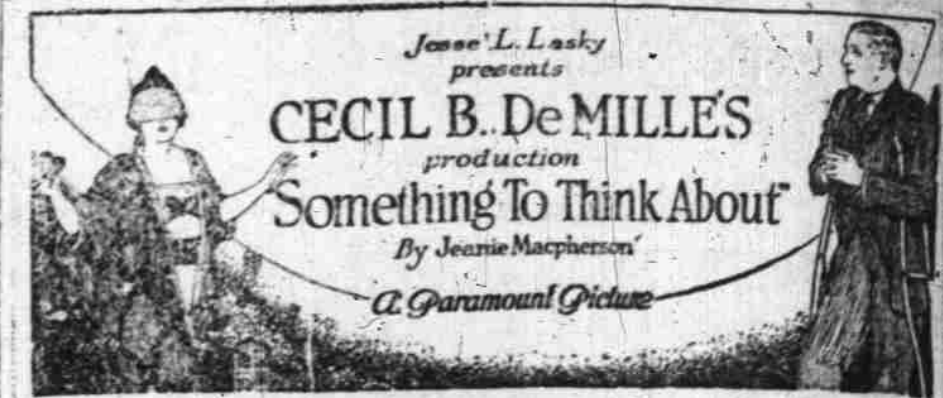

Attendance only 2200 under the record for the highest day up to Wednesday of this week.

Lea luck may be good for a record Friday and Saturday.

There may be room for improvement yet; but do you remember when at every state fair time open gambling was the rule in all the saloons of Salem, and pool selling and open gambling in many other forms were carried on without question or even comment at the state fair? And all the rounder and most of the rough-
