Spokane High School Youth Wins Big Race

Greater Oregon Derby Prize of $1000 Goes to Robert Emmert, Jr.

CANADIAN HORSES WIN
Mildred Direct, Owned by Johnston of Calgary, Takes Free-for-All Pace

Robert Emmert, Jr., 15 years old, a freshman in North Central high school, Spokane, today won the Greater Oregon Derby, and with it a purse of $1000, when his horse, Bonnie's Buck, covered the mile and one-eighth at Lone Oak track in 1:55 3-4. The race was run in a rain and the track was a mass of mud and water.

Belle of the Kitchen, owned by the lad's mother, took third in the event, second place going to Tom Goose, owned by Mrs. L. Small. Neither young Emmert nor his mother was here, the animals being in charge of Robert Emmert, Sr., the boy's father, a farmer of Conner's Creek, Alberta.

There was a lusty round of cheers as Miss Hatton, a Portland girl, was carried to the center of the muddy race course on the lowering shoulders of Mayor George L. Baker of Portland where she encircled the bowed neck of Bonnie's Buck with a floral wreath.

Both Bonnie's Buck and Belle of the Kitchen have won races on other tracks this season. At Calgary the later won, with Buck in second place.

"The boy gets every cent of the purse," said Emmert, Sr., when he was hunted out at his stable. "You can imagine the argument he and his mother will have tonight when they hear the news."

Mr. Emmert will take the horses as far south as Tia Juana. Mildred Direct, owned by Fred Johnston of Calgary, won the free-for-all pace, the first money was awarded Grattan Boy, owned by A. L. Philip of Los Angeles, in the free-for-all trot, when the scheduled three-in-five event was halted after the horse had won two heats, because of the lateness of the hour.

AT RANDOM

When Babe Ruth first received his first free press notices, very likely it pleased him. Being now over-fed on press notices, it was no surprise to note that he has just sued a film concern for damages—and lost the suit. He asked a cool million dollars damages from the film company for using his picture without his consent. While Babe Ruth, it would seem, is showing poor judgment suing publicity agencies upon which he lives and which he lives and which have made him so popular, yet these agencies are also to blame for this comeback on the part of their protegee. Too little attention is paid to the native conceit of their "over-night" heroes, who soon forget the lower rounds upon which they climbed to fame and fortune.

Reporters built Babe Ruth a great reputation, free of charge. It was only a question of time until Babe Ruth, quite naturally, began to "expect" daily notices worthy of his prowess with a stick and leather ball. Is it any wonder, after being immortalized, punned, paraphrased, syndicated, photographed and "press" noticed until Babe Ruth became near-great, that he felt it a natural thing to do when he filed a suit for a million dollars against a film concern for exhibiting his picture without his consent? The suit was promptly dismissed and now anybody can photograph Babe Ruth, so long as they can make the public think he is a current event.

Now that publicity concerns may expect to be sued for $1,000,000 should they print his picture or mention his name without his consent, the chances are that Babe Ruth will lose his popularity with such concerns and he may be obliged to purchase space, like any ordinary advertiser. Just how important to our country just now is his ability to hit a ball with a stick 62 times in one season is a matter for future historians to determine.

Our good friend, Cooke Patton, recently attended the Elks' state convention, held at Vancouver, Wash. While there, during the big parade he observed there were no Salem Elks present, and, believing in boosting his home town, he hunted up a sign painter and had a banner made which read: "Cooke Patton, No. 336, Salem, Oregon." He then stationed himself on a prominent corner waiting for a good place in the parade going by. While doing so he espied a lone man walking between two bands carrying a banner over his shoulder which bore the following inscription: "James Blank, No. —, Salem, Mass." Forthwith "Salem, Oregon," takes to the street and starts to march alongside of "Salem, Mass." The crowd noticed the two lone Elks, one from Salem, Oregon and one from far away Massachusetts, and loudly cheered them. The committee on line of march named the two as the most unique entry in the parade. "It was the event of the day," said Cooke, speaking of the novelty, "and we were given a hand all along the line of March. We felt proud as we had a big band in front of us and a big one behind us." At a hotel later it was found upon comparing notes, that both were life members and both honorary life members of their respective lodges. "So, after all, Salem, Mass., had nothing on Salem, Oregon, even if it wouldn't change its name to please us," said Cooke.

It is said that Champion Jack Dempsey is preparing to have a French Carpentier build another story to his reputation as a prize fighter. Work is said to begin somewhere in the near future, perhaps in Mexico. Champion Dempsey wants to look out that the French artisan doesn't have a soft spot under his cornerstone, and tumble his house down.

The Western Pipeless carries the Guarantee of perfect satisfaction or money refunded Dust Proof—Principal of The

—pipeless furnace

The principle upon which the pipeless furnace operates is that the hot air from the furnace rises, and by leaving the doors of the various rooms open, the hot air flows to all the rooms. As the furnace delivers the warm air to the rooms, it draws the cold air from the floors. The warm air at the ceiling cools and settles to the floor, where it is drawn to the furnace again, heated and returned to the rooms, completing the circulation. In other words, it heats the rooms from the ceiling down, the hot air seeking its own level all over the house. To illustrate, if you were filling a house with water, by leaving the doors open all the rooms will be filled alike. In exactly the same way a house fills with warm air, but from the ceiling down. The air is kept in constant circulation, and the temperature of the various rooms is practically the same all of the time.

The cut shows how the cold air is drawn off from the floor above, between the outer and inner casings, as indicated by the arrows. The inner casing is cut off at the bottom, as shown, so that the cold air flows into the furnace proper beneath it. It is thoroughly heated and returned to the rooms above. This inner casing is very heavily lined with asbestos and tin, and there is absolutely no radiation of heat to the basement. The casing is amply large and will allow the free flow of air, which is essential to the proper operation of any pipeless furnace.

We are prepared for prompt delivery and installing service. A telephone call will bring our furnace expert to you—talk it over with him.
