REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

The Story of a Honeymoon

A Wonderful Romance of Married Life Wonderfully Told by ADELE GARRISON

CHAPTER 716
HOW MADGE CAME TO LILLIAN AT THE HOSPITAL

"Talk about your third reels!" Lillian began her story enthusiastically—"I've never seen anything more thrilling than your advent at the hospital yesterday afternoon."

I was consumed with curiosity to know how Lillian—who, I knew, was at her home in the city when I had started upon my jaunt through the woods—had happened to be at the country hospital when the officer brought me there. But I knew better than to ask the question again after the rebuff she had given me when I made the query before. She evidently meant to tell the story in her own way, and I knew her well enough to be sure that her own part in it would be minimized to the last degree.

"It was just at twilight," Lillian went on, "and I was just starting away to hunt elsewhere for you when a high-powered motor car literally reeled like a living, drunken thing along the private road leading to the hospital. The superintendent and head nurse, who were interested in my search for you, had come to the steps with me, and both exclaimed at once: 'Wait! This looks like trouble. She may be in this.'"

"The man at the wheel, in an army officer's uniform, was evidently at almost the last gasp of his endurance. His face was deadly pale, though the pallor was partly obscured by the grime and sweat on it. But his eyes were blazing as they watched the man crouched in the front of the machine.

"The officer was practically running the machine with one hand, for while the other rested on the wheel, and was, of course, of some little help, yet his fingers clutched a revolver pointed at the head of the man crouched in front. The officer evidently had compelled the man to assume this posture so that he could watch his prisoner and the road at the same time.

"And on the floor of the tonneau, wrapped in a nondescript array of coats, and literally upholstered with cretonne pillows, I caught sight of you, looking as if you were dead."

Lillian stopped, caught her breath and looked at me with shining eyes. I realized anew the warm, sisterly affection she has for me, realized also what must have been her emotion at the discovery of which she had told me.

"He must have taken the cretonne pillows from the inn veranda," I commented, with the ridiculous absorption in the little things of which the feminine mind is sometimes capable.

Lillian looked interested. "Remember, I haven't the faintest idea yet where you have been," she said. "That is a story I'm anxiously waiting to hear. All I know is the end of the yarn we got from your rescuer before he collapsed."

"I'll Manage This."

"As he drew the machine up to the curb and stopped it he called out without turning his eyes away from his captive:

"The superintendent, the head nurse and I were already at the tonneau of the machine.

"Yes," I answered quickly, in order to assure him that one part of his errand had been accomplished, and I have been hunting for my friend. We will take care of her now."

I flashed a mental tribute at Lillian. How unerringly she recognized and did the right, necessary thing in every emergency.

"Thanks!" he said simply, but there was something in his voice that told me he was about all in.

"I saw that I wasn't really needed with you—the head nurse re-enforced by two or three helpers, was bearing you swiftly into the hospital, so I stepped to the officer's side.

"What can I do for you?" I asked.

"Does there happen to be an army officer or an officer of the law about here?" he asked.

"The superintendent of the hospital is an efficient woman. She turned toward the hospital quickly.

"There will be an army officer here in two minutes," she promised, as she fairly ran into the house.

"Can you manage a gun?" the officer asked of me, his eyes still fixed on the captive's face.

"For answer I put my own hand over the trembling one which held the revolver and grasped the gun firmly.

"I'll manage this," I told him.

"So Long, Ernest!"

"He took his hand from the revolver, leaned back and closed his eyes. Every second I expected him to swoon where he sat, but though his face was ashen, and he was evidently suffering great pain, he kept conscious until the superintendent came back with an officer from the aviation field who had been visiting a friend in the hospital.

"The wounded officer in the car saluted.

"Nest of spies down the road, two miles," he said weakly. "Called the Edelweiss Inn. You'll find one man dead, rest subordinate escaped. This chap here, Ernest something or other, ringleader and brains. Take care of—him."

His voice faltered, stopped. Then he roused himself with an effort, and just before he fell against me, he murmured mockingly:

"So long, Ernest!"

Owens and Rathie Are Received at Penitentiary

Elvie D. Kerby, alias Jim Owens, and John Laffeban alias Jack Rathie, arrived at the state penitentiary Sunday to await execution on December 3 for implication in the murder of Sheriff Til Taylor of Pendleton.

Floyd Henderson and Irvin L. Stoop also were brought in to begin serving their life sentences for implication in the same crime. The men were brought in by Sheriff W. R. Taylor and Deputies Glenn Bushee and Joe Lyday of Pendleton.

Neither Laffeban nor Kerby would make any extended statement.

The officers said both men were in good spirits on the road from Pendleton.

Emmett Bancroft, alias Neil Hart, who fired the shot that killed Sheriff Taylor, and who is to be executed November 5, is under death watch.

Information from Pendleton is that the case of Rathie and Kerby has been appealed to the supreme court.

Bennett Files Report With Banking Board

Will H. Bennett, state superintendent of banks, has filed with the state banking board the report that was requested by the board relative to what was done by his department to protect patrons of the Bank of Jacksonville prior to the failure of that institution. The report will not be made public for some time because of the pending grand jury investigations into some of the activities of the officers of the bank.

Bennett's report covers records of all examinations made of the Bank of Jacksonville by the banking department, all correspondence and all regular and special reports of the bank filed with the banking department.

Further it calls attention to the banking law which prohibits all records, except the published reports made five times each year, from being made public records or open to public inspection.

Marshall Says League Is Only Solution

YOUNGSTOWN, O., Oct. 11.—Vice President Marshall, opening a speaking tour in Ohio tonight said that a Republican administration had thrown the United States into its first foreign entanglements by ventures in Cuba, Hawaii and the Philippines. He declared that adoption of the league of nations is the only method of settling disputes.

Declaring that after America has granted the Philippines their independence the nation would "shed its last drop of blood and spend its last dollar to keep anyone from taking away that independence." He asked the audience whether they preferred to have America take that task alone or have the support of 30 other countries in the league.

Referring to charges of Democratic extravagance in the war Mr. Marshall said that if the government had awaited to get bids for every order of steel "the war would still be going on today and it would be on this side of the Atlantic."

Battleship Oregon May Come to Portland Harbor

PORTLAND, Ore., Oct. 11.—Lieutenant Commander John A. Beckwith reported today he had received word from the navy department that if the state of Oregon will provide a sufficient number of naval reservists for active duty about the battleship Oregon, that famous old craft will be assigned to Portland harbor.

JAIL KEEPER TAKEN

CORK, Oct. 11.—The first known case of an attack on an Irish prison official occurred yesterday when Thomas Griffin, warden in the Cork jail, was kidnapped. No trace of him has been found.

It was stated that Griffin was on the "black list," being accused of tormenting hunger strikers in jail by offering them food, and of mistreating other prisoners.
