REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

The Story of a Honeymoon

A Wonderful Romance of Married Life Wonderfully Told by
ADELE GARRISON

CHAPTER 717

WHAT LILLIAN TOLD MADGE ABOUT HER PRESENCE IN THE HOSPITAL.

Lillian's voice stopped abruptly. She seemed to be living over again the exciting scene which she had just described to me.

I was sure she had told me all she knew concerning the young officer. For the story of what had happened at the inn I must wait until my wounded rescuer in another room of the hospital was recovered sufficiently to talk.

But there was another side of the story upon which Lillian had not touched, one about which I was consumed with curiosity. I resolved, pettishly, that I would wait no longer upon Lillian's modesty.

"Don't fancy I'm going to let you stop talking," I said childishly. "I want to know how you happened to be out here so opportunely."

Lillian frowned. It is a trick of hers I know so well, one she always employs when she is asked to relate anything about her own doings. It is only when Lillian completely forgets herself in a narration, as she had done in describing the wounded officer's dramatic arrival at the hospital, that she inadvertently allows one to catch a glimpse of the initiative and the resourcefulness which is always hers in any emergency.

"There's nothing much to tell," she said.

Madge Is Surprised.

I caught her hand and drew her down to me.

"Surely you aren't going to make me ill again with baffled curiosity?" I pleaded whimsically.

She kissed me, her face clearing.

"There's no resisting you, you persistent child," she said, relenting. "But there truly isn't much to tell. You remember I told you we were keeping a strict watch over that German who tried to enter my library, whose hand you scarred with the carbolic acid?"

"But" — I stammered — I thought he had been captured and shut up that night he followed Allen Drake and me to Jamaica. I saw the officer secure him."

"Captured, yes, but shut up only for a few hours," Lillian returned. "He is too useful to our plans to remain shut up. When he gets too obstreperous we thwart him and put him out of the way until that particular plan of his has been spoiled. Then we let him go again, but always guarded, although he doesn't know it. And among his most confidential pals are trusted fellows of our own, one of them, about the cleverest chap we have. The man with a scarred hand doesn't send or receive a message or perform the simplest act without this man knowing it."

The Search Begun.

"Ah!" The exclamation broke from me. I recalled again Ernest's declaration that he had sent word of my presence at the inn to a man who was "exceedingly anxious to see me," and "who had a score to settle with me."

"Did you see him at all?" Lillian demanded anxiously. "Was he the man responsible for that shot? I haven't heard any report as yet from our man who was shadowing him, so I don't know whether he has managed to elude us or not."

"I don't think he was at the inn at all, at least I didn't see him," I replied. "And the shot which 'put me out of business' as Dicky would say, was fired by the man who was killed."

"About whom you are going to tell me when I have satisfied your insatiable curiosity," Lillian retorted, smiling.

"Our system works very smoothly," she went on, "so that it couldn't have been but a few minutes after the man with the scarred hand had received the message from the inn that I had a copy of it, as I receive copies of all his letters, wires and phones.

"'Have caged the pigeon you lost,' it ran. 'She just flew in'.

"The thing came by messenger, evidently having been telephoned to some one else first for safety. There was no clue to the place from which it had been sent, but the man immediately went to the Long Island station.

"Of course, as soon as I received the copy of the message I dashed down to the station myself, but he had already gone. So there was nothing else to do but to go to your house and to find out where you had gone. I was certain the message meant you, and you can imagine how desperate I was when I found out that you had started away on a walking tour.

"It seemed a hopeless proposition to trace you, but something seemed to tell me to try the hospitals first—I suppose because there was nothing else to try. Your mother-in-law—who is a brick, God bless her!—had Katie pack up some things of yours in a jiffy, and I got that Marvin taxi man, Doran, by the sheerest luck. That chap can make a taxi stand on its hind legs and do everything but speak. We went on one wheel around every corner, struck here first and—you know the rest."
