AT RANDOM

How many people in Salem know where Lemrock station, Oregon, is located? Would those who have never heard of such a place be surprised to learn that this railway station is within the city limits of the Capital City? That it is located at the corner of Twelfth and Marion streets? Well, such is the case.

ple alighting from an evening train fair week. Regular passengers can be seen daily waiting for the outgoing train. It is a nucleus which will spell something in a large way some day in the future. Passengers who are now sitting under Frank Southwick's apple tree, waiting for the train, will be holding for a pressed brick station before long. I can't find the word "Lemrock" in my dictionary, and don't know what the word means, however, it is a pretty word and it does not sound bad at all to speak of Lemrock station, Salem, Oregon.

The sudden downpouring of rain during the last days of the state fair, practically reducing the great exhibition of Oregon's products to a three days' most successful meet, raises the question as to what we are going to do about it. Something must be done to keep the weather from interfering with our most important exhibition held in the state. Either we must change the date to the first part of August or find some way to keep it raining in September and October. There are several individuals of whom it is said that they can make it rain easy enough, but who in the world can make it stop? There is a lot of talk going on all the time about the rain and the state fair, but it amounts to nothing. Like Mark Twain once said, "There is a lot of talk about the weather but nothing is ever done about it."

John Ruskin says that we can make our own weather if we only will, but nobody seems to pay any attention to what he says about it. Every body is permitted to say what they think of the weather, and what is everybody's business is nobody's business. Hence, we get every kind of weather imaginable, but the right kind of weather never comes at the right time. Now that the automobile brings many people from far distances we owe it to these visitors to make the fair enjoyable, rain or shine. It was once planned to cover all walks between pavilions and have all concessions housed in permanent buildings. With the grounds properly enclosed, at the worst, we would lose only the horse racing.

It is almost impossible to treat a bad cold with the old-fashioned remedy these days.

The Spa Reduces Price of Candy

We are glad to announce to our customers that the decline in the price of sugar and other raw materials used in the manufacture of candies makes it possible for us to reduce our prices to about the same standard maintained before the recent wave of high prices. We are glad to be able to make these reductions and take pride in the fact that we are the first of the local candy manufacturers to take steps towards putting our products back to a pre-war basis.
