The Story of a Honeymoon his extreme weakness. A Wonderful Romance of Married Life Wonderfully Told by ADELE GARRISON

CHAPTER 726 WHAT WILLIAM TRUMBULL

BROUGHT TO MADGE. As William watched Lillian in her characteristic attitude when she's in deep thought, into his queer, twisted face crept a graver, more alert expression than I'd ever before seen there. I expecied to see Lillian wither him with a look, but she has the keepest perceptions of any one I know, and she evidently heard some note in his voice, saw somethise in his truculent gaze which awakened her interest. She looked at him attentively, searchingly. 'If you're goin' to cook up anytown, ranges, some furniture for $3250 thin against Katie I kin tell you 'tain't one bit fair." William's words fairly tumbled over each "Katie jest worships the ground Mist Gramie walks on, an' if she did listen-and, mind you, and. mind you, I ain't tellin' you whether she done it or not-'twas only because she was crazy 'fraid there was somethin' goin' on that might hurt her. Katie'd have her right hand cut off before she'd tell anythin' that would hurt he only sure way is as Abe Martin ad- Mis Gramie. And as for mevised, fold it up and stick it back in well, I'd jest like to see the man your pecket. No we won't claim that could get anything out of me said, laying her hand on the old fellow's shoulder. "And both Mrs Graham and I are very grateful for your devotion to her, very glag she has such faithful friends, But," her face grew stern and forbidging, and I saw poor, old William quail visibly at the look in her eyes, "there must be no more listening at keyholes, no matter what your reason for so doing. I will tell you now, and Katie the first time I see her, that the very next time either of you does such a thing, that moment means your discharge from Mrs. Graham's service. Not only that-"Do You Understand?" She paused as if to give emphasis to her words. Although I knew that most of her sternness was assumed for the purpose of abutting upon Lot No. 4 and the frightening William, yet so effective was her manner that I think I, as well as William, held my breath for her next words. happen to have the power to put either of you in jail for such a trick. I should be terribly sorry to do such a thing, but I shan't hesitate to do it if I ever find out you or Katie have been listening again." Ilknew that Lillian must be filled with inward laughter at the absurdity of her own threat. I could hardly keep my own lips from twisting into a smile. Lillian had guaged his mentality aclaid on the north side of Leffelle curately. He was so filled with error that he had to moisten his lips before he could speak.

> demanded. "Yes, ma'am. Yes, ma'am." he repeated. "Yes, ma'am, I understand. I never did listen at no keyholes anyhow, and you can bet Katie won't do nothin' like that ever again. I'll tell her-"You will tell her nothing," Lillian interrupted sternly. "You will not mention one word of this conversation to her if you want to keep your place and hers. I'm going down to Mrs. Graham's place today, and I will see Katie
