Damage by Fire—Approximately $700 in damage is said to have been the result of a fire Sunday in the H. H. Underwood residence, 435 North Winter street. The fire is thought to have started from a flue which had burned out earlier in the day.

Election Returns—Grand theater, Tuesday night.

Twins to be Adopted—The twin baby boys, Richard Loren and Robert Leon Eshelman, who, since the death of their mother last summer, have been under the supervision of Rev. and Mrs. H. N. Aldrich, will undoubtedly through the legal proceedings taken recently, become adopted children in the home in which they have lived since last August. Following the death of the mother of the little fellows, they were cared for in the Aldrich home for six weeks. During this time Mr. Aldrich, after careful consideration, selected the home in Portland for them, in which they are living. Under the conditions, in order to make the adoption legal it is necessary to secure papers through the Boy's and Girl's Aid society of Oregon after due notice to the father by publication. On Friday, papers were filed with the county clerk to take action in legalizing the adoption.

REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

The Story of a Honeymoon

A Wonderful Romance of Married Life Wonderfully Told by ADKLE GARRISON

CHAPTER 734

WHAT IS IT THAT THE WOUNDED OFFICER REQUIRES OF MADGE?

"I wish it were time to clip the claws of that Draper cat," Lillian said, after she had subsided into her chair again. "But I've got to let her have rope enough not only to hang herself, but a lot of other people."

I looked up quickly, wondering why. Had Lillian forgotten, I asked myself, that if Grace Draper had "rope enough to hang herself," Harry Underwood would in all probability share her fate?

That Lillian would not falter in her duty because the man who had so recently been her husband was involved, I well knew. This was not the cause of my wonder. It was amazement that she could speak so casually, almost flippantly, of a prospect so dreadful.

But as my eyes met hers I saw by her start, by her burning flush, that for once she had forgotten her husband's connection with Grace Draper and the enemy plots in which the girl was involved. I averted my eyes quickly that I might not see the anguished remembrance in her face, and tried to think of some other topic of conversation.

"But my brain wasn't quick enough. It was Lillian, herself, who effectually dismissed the subject of Grace Draper."

"Her," she said brusquely, and I knew she was covering her disfigurement of the moment before by her manner, "you don't ever want to see this thing again, do you?"

She held out the sheets of the letter which she had just reread. Her very finger-tips expressed the loathing with which she regarded them.

"Indeed, no," I replied forcibly. "I wish I didn't have to," she said regretfully, "but I don't dare throw away this piece of evidence against her. Yet I can promise you there won't be any publicity given to it. Probably no one but myself and one other person will ever see it."

She folded the sheets and put them away in her handbag.

"Thus endeth another chapter," she said. "Let's not think of the Draper again until we have to."

Coming to my side she bent over me, and her manner held tender wistfulness.

"You're sure there isn't any lingering doubt in your mind about Dicky, Madge?" she asked.

I hesitated for a moment, or two, searching my own soul to be sure that I was truthful in my answer. Then with a sudden realization of the big-hearted loyalty of the woman beside me, and the surer, saner viewpoint that was hers, so much broader and clearer than mine, I banished every vestige of suspicion from my mind.

"If you are satisfied, I am, dear friend," I returned. "Your decision is good enough for me."

She kissed me tenderly.

"Something tells me that you will be very glad indeed some day—and that not so very far away—that you have given Dicky your loyal belief in spite of this evil contrivance to deceive you."

There was a solemn note in her voice, a look in her eyes that awed me. I have come to have an almost superstitious belief in Lillian's psychic powers. She is positively clairvoyant at times.

CHANGE OF THOUGHT.

A little, shivery fear clutched at my heartstrings. Was Dicky in some danger of which I didn't know, and had Lillian's telepathic nature sensed it? I was almost ready to believe anything, so unstrung was I by the ordeal through which I had just gone.

I fairly jumped at the light tap that sounded on the door. It was a knock I knew, that of the nurse who attended the wounded officer down the corridor.

Lillian glanced at me sharply.

"I hope you are needed in the other room," she said. "I think I shall send you over anyway. You need a change of thought."

The nurse said a few hurried words to Lillian and then hastened back down the corridor.

JANGLING NERVES.

"Nothing of any consequence," Lillian replied. "Your officer is very restless today, and they wish to try the remedy they have found most effective—your soothing presence by his side."

I knew that Lillian was making a jest of the matter in order to quiet my jangling nerves, but there was something about her words which jarred me unaccountably.
