CITY NEWS IN BRIEF

More Delicacies Needed

Today and Saturday are the last days that donations of jams and jellies may be left at the armory for the tubercular soldiers at Fort Bayard, N. M. The American War Mothers are backing the movement and are asking every Salem woman who has not contributed to do it at once. A large number of jars have been received, but as there are nearly 1000 soldiers in the government hospital, it will take a large amount to make a creditable showing.

Professional Leads Motor Events, but Salem Amateur Thrills Crowd

Bob Newman, Portland professional, carried away most of the prize money in the motorcycle hill-climbing events on a Canyon road bluff three and one-half miles south of Salem yesterday afternoon. However, Delbert Cooper, Salem amateur, riding the same machine in all events, was probably the spectacular entry of the day, capturing one first, two seconds and one third.

In three events he was pitted against Newman. These meet was replete with thrills. The pitch of the grade ranged from 30 to 65 degrees, and time after time the motorcycles turned over backward and tumbled riderless down the hill, causing intense excitement among the spectators, who probably numbered 1000. Hundreds from Salem witnessed the events.

The hill was 300 feet from start to finish, and over a pasture course, enough stumps having been removed to give the cycles thoroughfare. Three times Newman drove his cycle a distance of 200 feet, the longest distance made during the contest. Once Delbert Cooper was only an inch short of the Portlander. In all 22 riders competed.

The results were as follows:

For 37-cubic inch motors—First, B. W. Rice, Portland, 155 feet four inches; second, Homer H. Best, Salem, 150 feet; third, Charles Thomas, Salem, 139 feet four inches.

For novice riders—First, Delbert Cooper, Salem, 196 feet 3 inches; second, C. V. Hinshaw,

Mrs. Palmer Dead

News was received in Salem yesterday afternoon of the death in Berkeley, Cal., of Mrs. A. D. Palmer, which occurred Monday, November 8, of pneumonia. Mrs. Palmer and daughter, Miss Emily Palmer, a former high school instructor, made their home in Salem about 10 years, going south two years ago. She had a host of friends here who will be deeply grieved to learn of her death.

REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

The Story of a Honeymoon
A Wonderful Romance of Married Life Wonderfully Told by ADELE GARRISON

CHAPTER 743

"ALL DAYS ARE ALIKE TO ME."

Captain Grantland did not leave the hospital, after all, upon the day he had set for himself. His imperious will, which had so enabled him to triumph over his weakness, delirium, had in fact been conquered by the consequences of his own indiscretion. He had insisted upon being allowed to talk to me undisturbed, had told me the story of the dramatic happenings at the inn, and had in turn listened to my tale of the events before his appearance. He had done this against the protests of his nurse, and he paid for his disobedience by an extra day or two of pain and weakness.

Therefore it was four days after our conversation instead of the two the interne had promised him when he finally said adieu to the hospital.

He had given me good-by the day before, for when I was assured that his talk with me had done him no lasting injury—knew that there was no further need of my presence at the hospital. And my wound had healed so far that there would be no difficulty in bolstering to Cousin Asa. The statement that my injury had been caused by being struck by an automobile.

"When—You—Do."

I found out something else when I went to bid the convalescent hero—I could think of him in no other terms—good-by. I realized that it was high time I went home and had certain things put with my own soul.

For I found that I was going home with the greatest reluctance. And it was reluctance based on no other feeling than the awe and admiring enjoyment I had had in the society of the officer who had saved me from death.

Curiously enough I did not sense the enormity of Dicky in the feeling I was experiencing, even though the contrast between my husband's attitude toward the world war and that of this dashing, heroic figure kept forcing itself upon me in spite of my strenuous efforts to bury it so deep that I should never be able to think about it.

My feeling resembled my shy hero-worship of a schoolgirl rather than any other feeling, and I blamed myself bitterly for my weakness when the full force of it burst upon me at the moment of my parting with the wounded officer.

Whether or not he had asked the nurse to leave the room I do not know. At any rate, I had no power entered the room for my trip home, than the rose, and with a formal word of salutation and excuse, went quietly away. The officer, evidently determined to be a sick man no longer, was dressed in his uniform and seated in an easy chair by the window.

As I came into the room he rose to his feet and drew a chair for me near him. The nurse did not seem to notice this unwise proceeding on the part of a man with so little strength—indeed, I had a quiet conviction that she had washed her hands of responsibility for her refractory patient—but as she closed the door behind her I took the chair from his hand.

"You mustn't exert yourself like this," I admonished him. "Please sit down."

"When—you—do," he said weakly but obstinately, and as he spoke I saw the tiny beads of perspiration betokening weakness start upon his forehead.

I sat down quickly for evidently there was no disputing him, and he sank back into his own chair with a little involuntary sigh of relief, and drew his handkerchief across his damp forehead.

"So you're going home?" he said abruptly, and I saw that he wished to hide his physical weakness as much as he possibly could. "Yes, in just a few minutes," I returned. "It's a wonderful day outside. I hope you will have as good a day tomorrow. I would hate to go home on a gloomy, rainy day."

A Strange Reply.

I knew that I was patently "making the conversation," but I was trying to fall in with the convalescent man's evident desire to keep the conversational ball rolling. I was startled and remorseful, however, to see the

"Bittell Makes Touchdown"

Salem was not able to hold the ball for long and, Adolph was forced to punt. By passes Chemawa again pushed the Salem squad to within their 10-yard line when Bittell in a run around end made the touchdown. They were successful in their goal kick and the score with only five minutes to play stood 7 to 0. For the remainder of the quarter Chemawa played for time and the game was finished before either had another chance to score.
