

Olcott to be at National Conference of Governors
Governor Olcott will leave the middle of next week for Harrisburg, Pa., where he will attend the convention of the national governors' conference which meets December 1 and will be in session three days. Immediately after the conference he will attend in the same city a conference of forestry officials of the different states, and will represent the Oregon board of forestry. This meeting will be of particular importance to Oregon since this state now has the largest amount of standing merchantable timber of all the states in the union. The governor will return to Salem about the middle of December.

HUGE YEARLY PRUNE OUTPUT IS PREDICTED

Lewis Tells Growers Annual Production May Reach 100,000,000 Pounds

LIVABLE PRICE OBJECT
Seymour Jones Tells of Benefit Certain to Come From Organization

There are 40,000 acres of prunes between Portland and Ashland compared to 10,000 acres just a few years ago. This year the Oregon crop, on account of rains, was reduced to 25,000,000 pounds. Within three years it is probable the annual Oregon crop may exceed 100,000,000 pounds. To handle this immense tonnage, there must be organization and co-operation," so declared C. I. Lewis at a meeting of the fruit men held Friday afternoon at the Commercial club.

In referring to what the Oregon Growers Co-operative association had done for its members, Mr. Lewis referred to the loganberry situation at the opening of the market and to the same condition that existed in the cherry market.

Slashing Spoils Market
In referring to the present prune market, Mr. Lewis told the growers that the association had named prices that it was thought would move the crop, considering a downward market in all foods.

But as soon as the association named its opening prices, outside buyers and packers at once cut half a cent. When the association met the cut, the price was again slashed. For this reason, Mr. Lewis thought the association should not be held responsible for lower prices and a weak market when the Oregon Growers is working to uphold the market with outside packers cutting under.

"When we have 75 per cent of the tonnage, we can prevent any such slashing in prices," declared Mr. Lewis. "As long as there are any cheap prunes for the packers to buy, he will continue to sell cheap."

Seymour Jones, a director of the association and a member of the executive board, told the growers a falling market existed on all commodities, and they should not be surprised if prune conditions were unsatisfactory.

Referring to the cut in prune prices, Mr. Jones remarked that it was the independent packers who started it. With the going lower and lower, with the present low wool market, and with the hog market off and down at a price lower than for years, Mr. Jones thinks it natural that the prune market should partake of the same conditions.

Stability Needed
"I'm for the Oregon Grower's Co-operative association," declared Mr. Jones, "because I feel it will stabilize the prune market of the valley. I base this on conclusive evidence. All we need to do this is to control a larger acreage. I'm for a livable price year after year. I don't want 20 cents one year for my prunes and then 5 cents a pound the following year. Stand by the association. If you do not organize and have co-operation, you will be at the mercy of the independent packers and buyers."

M. O. Evans, field manager of the association, told of the general work of the field men and of the difficulty of seeing personally all the 1,600 growers who are members.

The meeting, which was the first of the season, was attended by 150 growers and was one of the most interesting yet held. Announcement was made that meetings would be held monthly at the Commercial club and that each member would be notified of the date of the next meeting.

Engineer's Presence of Mind Saves Lives

Presence of mind of an engineer of the Southern Pacific company probably saved lives at a trade crossing near Eugene on October 4, according to a letter written by A. T. Mercier, superintendent of the company, to the Purity Bakery of Eugene. A copy of the letter has been received at the public service commission.

A delivery truck driven by an employe of the company was approaching the crossing at a rapid rate. The engineer figured that the driver probably would try to cross and put on his brakes. As the truck started across the railway track its motor stalled and the engineer was able to stop his train with the "cow catcher" against a wheel of the truck.
