SAYS IT FIRST AND SAYS IT LAST
Carrie G. Harren, 319 Nicholson St., Norfolk, Va., writes: "I'll tell anybody that Foley's Honey and Tar is all right. It did me all the good, I said it first and I'll say it last." Thousands of bottles of this reliable remedy were bought last week by careful mothers so as to be prepared to check coughs, colds and croup at the beginning. It acts almost instantly, cuts phlegm, soothes raw, irritated membranes, stops tickling in throat. Sold everywhere.

CHAPTER 774

WHAT HAPPENED WHEN LIL-LIAN FACED HARRY UNDER-WOOD.

"Madge! Thank heaven!" Lillian ejaculated as she came up to me, and as she put out her hands and grasped mine impulsively I felt them tremble. I realized that her anxiety for me must have been something unusual, for visible emotion is a rare thing with her.

"What happened? Quick!" she demanded the next moment, all her usual poise and briskness of manner restored.

"Beg pardon, Harry, for interrupting, but I've got to get to the bottom of this, pronto, so I'll know what to do."

The words were tossed at him as casually as if the husband and wife had just met after no longer a separation than an hour or two. I saw a touch of scarlet come into Harry Underwood's bronzed cheeks, and rejoiced—although surprised—that his nerves were sensitive enough to be thus flicked upon the raw by Lillian's casualness. Perhaps, I reflected, he really had the grace to be ashamed of himself.

Either I was mistaken, however, or else he masked his real sentiments most cleverly, for the drawl with which he answered her was, I imagined, intentionally provocative.

"Oh, I'll forgive you," he said. "Always glad to do anything I can for the ladies."

There wasn't even a quiver of Lillian's eyelashes to indicate that she had heard him. She had turned to me expectantly even as he began speaking, and I hardly waited for him to finish before beginning the tale of the strange chauffeur who had represented himself to be her messenger.

A Point Withheld.

I carefully related my story, avoiding, however, any betrayal of Lillian's secret service connection. True, Harry Underwood had told me he knew of it, but discussion of that incident was for Lillian's ear alone.

Lillian listened with concentrated attention to my low, rapid words in the recessed window of the corridor to which we had walked. Mr. Underwood twirled his walking stick and gazed into space with an air of infinite boredom. Yet I was sure that in reality his attention was as absorbed as Lillian's. Although I wasn't looking directly at him, yet I was psychically conscious that his carefully masked, shrewd glances shot rapier-like at both of us whenever he was sure he was unobserved.

It was characteristic of Lillian that she should not interrupt me with a single question. When I had finished with the simple words, "And then I met Mr. Underwood and the men were frightened away," she looked me squarely in the eyes, and I saw that she knew I had purposely omitted something from the narrative. But I could not tell the story of Harry Underwood's imitation secret service badge while he was within earshot.

She stood, evidently thinking word. Not even his iron will and assurance could carry it through, knowing as he did, what our knowledge of him must be. Neither could he control the color that blazed in his face. Yet, with all my distrust and abhorrence of the man's treatment of Lillian, I could not help believing his assertion that he'd had nothing to do with the forged note.

And then I saw Lillian do the only deliberately cruel thing I ever witnessed in her. She straightened herself to her full height and faced the man whose name she still bore. "Upon your honor!" she said slowly, blisteringly. "Come, Madge, let's get out of this!"

RECOMMENDED TO SCHOOL CHILDREN

This is the season when children are subject to croup, colds and coughs. Rena C. Marchard, 36 Lawrence St., Salem, Mass., writes: "I used Foley's Honey and Tar with good results. I had a very bad cold and it gave me relief at once, so I recommend it to every child that goes to school." This standard, low priced medicine loosens and clears mucus and phlegm, checks strangling coughing, makes easy breathing, soothes and heals raw, inflamed membranes, and stops tickling in throat. Sold everywhere.

PROUD HINT
He was a very popular curate and when he gained his earthly reward of a pleasant living and left the country parish he was very much missed. His successor, not much of a countryman, went to call on Mother Brown one Monday afternoon, who at once took his parochial education in hand.

"I be main sorry t'other curate's gone," she said, "for this I will say that there curick, he allus did know when 'twas washin' day."
