A Wonderful Romance of Married Life Wonderfully Told by ADELE GARRISON

CHAPTER 775

WHY TO AND WORDS TO MADGE 14 WORRIED HER.

If I had ever thought Harry Underwood thoroughly calloused, impervious to attack or criticism of his conduct I had my theory proved false when contempt came upon him. The color drained from his face, leaving it ghastly for a moment. Then he mechanically lifted his hat, raised it, bowed formally and turned away. But in that moment of withering contempt his eyes had met mine-involuntarily. I knewand in them was a tortured appeal for a more merciful Judgment than Lillian's, a passionate. lunspoken protest of innocence of this particular deed.

It was only a momentary vision, but it startled me into action. Heedless of Lillian's certain anger, I rushed after him. laid a detaining hand upon his arm.

"I believe you." I whispered hurriedly, "and I will make Lillian see, too." I spoke far more confidently than I felt, but he apparently took my words at their sound value. His eyes softened, brightened with relief, and he clasped almost convulsively my detaining hand. "Thank you, lady fair," he an-REAL ESTATE AND PIRE INSURANCE swered, a mournful cadence in his voice, which made me catch my breath, and then in a hurrled

> The next moment he was walking rapidly down the corridor, and I had turned to Lillian, quaking inwardly, for never had I deliberately gone counter to her plans. She stood motionless, gazing at me, her lips pressed closely together, her face white save for a bright spot of color", in either cheek, her eyes filled with a cold anger which I had seen before, but never directed toward me.

"If you're quite ready." she said fefly, "suppose we go home, She held up a summoning finger to the service chauffeur who had been standing just beyond earshot of us, and in another moment we were all walking back sions the corridor toward the main station. The distance we straversed comed endless to me, and neither

"I think you owe me an apolstrain of that terrible misunder- ogy. (To be continued) standing with my husband over my father's identity I had feared jeopardizing my regained happiness by asserting myself as I had done in the first year of my marringe. And sensibly I had acquired a mental habit of partial or total submission to the opinions and wishes of those around me, which I saw now was fast undermining my self-respect, to say nothing of my ideals.

What Madge Said.

Anger at myself, more bitter than I had ever felt at any one else surged through me. I shook myself slightly as if by the gesture I could cast off the old skin of meek indecision, and squared my shoulders with the resolution met Dicky, when I was mentally courageous, and when other people deferred to my opinious, not I to theirs. Of course, I was not so unbalanced as to include Lillian among years for $1.00. the people whom I intended to dominate or at least refuse domwas like a person set apart, besides, she was my superior officer in service. But I felt that at any cost I must prevent her ever speaking to me again in the tone she had just used. My anger was cooling, and I realized that our friendship was too necessary and too preclous to me to risk its
