HIDDEN WOUNDS BY CECIL FANNING

Now doesn't it seem both strange and queer. That those whom we hold in life most dear. Wound us more often than we can tell. But they do it thoughtlessly. Ah! Well! Sometimes it's the hand too lightly pressed, Sometimes silence when words are best; Sometimes a forgotten goodnight kiss, Sometimes it's the goodbye word we miss; Sometimes it's the laugh that comes in wrong, Sometimes a frown when we need a song; Sometimes a smile they forget to smile, Sometimes a tear through a bitter trial. No doubt we wound in the selfsame way, And seem as thoughtless. Well, who can say? Life is so easy to misconstrue And shirk the things that we ought to do. But we go on loving them the more, And try to smile, though our hearts are sore. Could they understand if we tried to tell How they wound us thoughtlessly? Ah! Well!
