WHY MADGE FELT GREAT AP-PREHENSION OVER THE brought me back to reality with a TELEGRAM.

"Miss Katherine Sonnot." the telegram began. "Mrs. Allis has left the sanitarium. Woman friend, accompanied by attorney, demanded her release. No legal authority to hold her. In dangerous mood. Advise be on guard.

(Signed) "Hannah Spicer." I folded the 'elegram mechanically, waited a moment before I spoke. I am not general exclamatory at the receipt of bad news, and since my association with Lillian in the service I have tried to imitate her imperturbable calmness.

"I wonder who engineered her release?" I said. "Surely no real friend could have wished-" Lillian's exasperated look and my own intuition flashed the truth upon me simultaneously. I broke off my inane conjectures abruptly. "I see you think-" I began. "That Grace Draper was the accommodating 'woman friend'. finished Lillian. "Surest thing you know. Don't you remember at the time the Allis creature was prowling around Marvin she emitted some words that showed she had a surprising and uncommon familiarity with the doings of Draper and her gang? She's just the sort of a nut Draper could make use of in per personal enmity to you. I'd give a good deal to know how long she's been deal to know how long she's been No. 13 San Francisco Pass. 9:34 pg mon familiarity with the doings away from the sanitarium, how, much start she's had, and I don't want to 'phone the sanitarium,

I'm sure she sent the telegram the moment Mrs. Allis left the place," I replied with as much calmness as I could manage, for the prospect of Grace Draper and Mrs. Allis in league against me was a terrifying one. "Couldn't you find out the hour the telegram was sent from the sanitar-

Lillian flashed me a glance 19 that made me flush consciously. "If you could realize how you're developing lately, Madge!" she said approvingly. "That's a corking suggestion, and I'll get busy on it at once." She hurried from the room with the prompt action which always follows any determination of hers, and she didn't return for a long time. When she finally came back her face was aglow with the triumph of achievement. Mine must have reflected the nervous anxiety which had been with me while she was gone, for she scrutinized me narrowly as she spoke. "The wire left the sanitarium at 11 o'clock this morning," she said. "If your estimate of Miss Spicer is correct, our lady probably left there just before that hour, so as the Draper is probably taking care of her, she'll hardly have started anything yet. Now what's to be done next?"

Lillian Decides. I wouldn't have answered the question even if I could have evolved a plan, for I knew Lillian's habits of thought and speech fairly well-the question is one she frequently addresses to the empty air when she's planning some course of action. I was not surprised to see her cup her chin in her palms immediately afterward and gaze into space
