The North Salem improvement association, according to a man down in that part of town, wants to do a competition of the various hoisting organizations which has been brought forward by the Bits for Breakfast man.

Joe says North Salem needs more car lines and street improvements, and he says it is a shame when they had a start that they did not go ahead and put through the things they were working on.

All right; North Salem is in, and let everybody out that way wake up and get busy. There is vast room to grow out in that part of town.

The next issue of The Statesman will be the Welcome edition. A large extra edition is being printed, but it will be such an outstanding immigration paper that they will not last long.

Mrs. Woods has sold four such milking animals in 30 days, and now she must import some pure breeds from Los Angeles, where her husband, E. E. Woods, is now looking over the milk goat herds down there, where there are thousands; including big milk goat dairies furnishing milk to the people of that city. Mrs. Woods has been breeding milk goats for some time, and she expects to keep on, as she finds the business growing fast all over the country.

"The message from the British prime minister transmitted by you on December 26 would seem to indicate the impracticability or futility of the president's addressing himself at least in the first instance, to the Armenians and Kemalists. The president is inclined to share this view and to feel that no solution can be had without first getting at the source of the trouble.

Armenia Under Russian Control "Pending receipt of information and assurances requested by the president in his telegram of November 30, it is deemed wise to state that the problem as the president views it, its causes and possible remedies. It would appear that the immediate cause of the trouble in Armenia and Turkey has been with the treaty of Sevres. Admittedly, this was a difficult question with which to contend but the treaty was drafted by the allied powers and the trouble has arisen over the failure of certain factions to accept this treaty and of the allies to enforce it. This is a question over which the president has no control and measures which he might take or recommend in this direction would be dependent upon the hearty co-operation and support of the allied powers.

The British prime minister calls attention to the report that Armenia is under control of Moscow from which it appears, another complication has developed. The dependence of Armenia on soviet Russia is another situation over which the president has no control and he sees no action he could take to free Armenia without the moral and diplomatic support of the principal powers which holds promise of bringing peace and accord to the contending parties.

There is bitter distrust and fear of war along all the Russian borders. It seems futile to attempt to bring peace to the Caucasus, if the result is merely to free the forces there engaged for new campaigns on other sectors. The distressful situation of Armenia is but one detail of this vast Russian problem and the president most earnestly urges his conviction that it is only by a general and comprehensive treatment of the whole problem, only by full and generous co-operation of the principal powers that a hopeful approach to the pacification and independence of Armenia can be found.

President's Attitude Expressed "The attitude of the president toward those now in power in Russia has been frequently and clearly expressed. He regards the bolsheviks as a violent and tyrannical minority, by no means representing the real desires and purposes of the Russian people, and that he has never believed that the problems raised by this coup d'etat could be solved by military action from outside. He hopes that the recent tragic events on the Polish front and in the Crimea have convinced all the world that armed invasion is not the way to bring peace to Russia.

"The rapidly shifting events of recent months have only strengthened his conviction that the Russian revolution, beneficent in its main purposes, must be developed to a satisfactory conclusion by the Russians. Help may come from time to time be given from outside and voluntarily received, but attempts at military coercion can but end in disaster.

"There are elements in the present situation which give added hope to projects of pacification. All the world is weary of war and the conviction grows among peoples of all countries that the military method offers very little promise of solving the grave problems of reconstruction. There is at present no overt civil war in Russia. It is now a problem of the relations between central Russia and the surrounding smaller national groups.

"The unrest and instability along the border are caused by bitter and mutual distrust. The struggling nationalities which were formerly part of the Russian empire are afraid to disarm and return to peace because they distrust the bolsheviks and fear new aggressions. The soviets contend that they are afraid to demobilize because they fear new attacks.

"The great impediment to peaceful reconstruction in those troubled border territories, the imminent danger of new hostilities, is caused by the confusion between offense and defense. Unless this distinction can be clearly defined there is not only small hope of peace but no hope of a clear perception of who is responsible for new wars.

"It is therefore the thought of the president that the present offers a peculiarly pressing impetus to an attempt at general pacification on the Russian borders along these lines. Such an attempt seems to the president the logical outgrowth—in fact, the only logical development of the request to mediate in the Armenian conflict and he feels bound in conscience once more to call this matter to the attention of the associated nations.

"It is obvious to all these small struggling border states will not attack great Russia unless encouraged by promise of support from the stronger powers. The president therefore believes that the sine qua non of an attempt at pacification must be a public and solemn engagement among the great powers not to take advantage of Russia's stricken condition and not to violate the territorial integrity of Russia or undertake the measures any further invasion of Russia nor to tolerate such invasion by others.

"Such a public agreement would in effect say to those now in power in Russia: 'You are not menaced from outside. The great powers have voluntarily guaranteed you from attack. You can have peace if you want it.'

"The responsibility for any new war which might break out on the Russian border would then be clearly placed.

"If the principal powers represented on the council of the league find themselves in accord with the president and will assure him of their moral and diplomatic support, he will instruct his personal representative, Mr. Morgenthau, to proceed at once on his mission."
