Thomas and Hume Break With Joseph on Vote

Relative to the purchase power Notwithstanding the agreement Moser explained that the bill on the port commission bills would give the commission aureached by senate leaders at a thority to purchase without a vote conference in the office of Presof the people only such property ident, Ritner during the noon recess yesterday, lurid oratory was not entirely lacking when the bills went to vote.

Senators Hume and Thomas refused to be lured to lend their endorsement to the Swan island concession and broke with Senator Joseph, another grenadier of the independent line, with the result that while the dove of peace had ascended it had a broken pinion and its hovering over the senate chamber was rather an ungraceful flopping.

Both Win Concessions

After the senate had gone into committee of the whole and amended the bills as agreed upon at the noon conference, the bills carried in that form. The amendments allow the purchase of Swan island without reference to the people. This was a concession to the faction led- by Senator Moser, representing the present commission. Representative Kay of Marion charged that the purpose in getting these bills back into the hands of the irrigation committee. from which place they originally emanated, was in order to get rid of the state engineer.

Mr. Gallagher's protest was that he had received many requests from various parts of the state holder of the bag, who flung me sking for a public hearing on an occasional scornful glance, My the question and that these delegates would be here this week and that he wished to have the bills for them to study and investigate.

having completed her negotiations and bearing aloft two young newspapers, without which no one was allowed to travel, here rejoined me, and we hastened from the station.

One foot was already upon the car-steps, when a sharp tug at the hand carrying the bag threw me off my balance and landed me on the neck of an apologetic old chap who was trying to reach the step at the same time. Both of us tumbled amid the laughter of the crowd, in a heap on the platform, from which I hurriedly detached myself, only to see my cherished bag rapidly vanishing into the waiting room, in the grip of the same chap who had been annoying me.

The bag or the train? In the moment of indecision, Providence again appeared on the job, in the guise of an elderly grey-haired man, upon whose arm I recognize the familiar "red triangle." Sensing that something was amiss, he did not stop for explanations but seizing me by the arm, hurried after the departing villian. Miss Merry followed along in the rear, escorted by the crowd, which evidently had decided to see the finish of the performance. The trail ended in the office a haughty gold-braided official who eyed us steraly, meantime carrying on an animated conversation with the new found champion seemed to
