Senators Enter Into Debate With Eloquence in Which They Are Famed

WASHINGTON, Feb. 3.—Members of the cabinet, diplomatic and army and navy officials assembled tonight as guests of the National Press club to hear an edifying "congressional" debate on the momentous question, "resolved, that tion the authenticity of the Book of Deuteronomy" as handed down by translators and declared it should be "amended by insertion of the clause: 'Blessed is the fat man, for he shall be in the kingdom of heaven'."

In rebuttal, Senator Harrison declared he was prepared to enter the combat "even if we have pitted against us two fat reactionary republicans who reminded me of the cartoon I used to see, with the dollar marks on the trust magnates."

Secretary Colby Recites. Only more time than the allotted ten minutes was necessary, he said, to permit a "complete demonstration of the fact that fat men rule the world."

History Is Recalled. Opening for the affirmative, Representative Tincher waded in without gloves. After denying any "noble" attribute to the lean men he declared, he "could prove by the actuary of any insurance department that the fat men are closer to heaven than the lean men."

The distinguished audience pronounced its approval of the show by an undignified burst of applause. Prior to the debate, Secretary Colby gave a recital on of Gray's "Elegy in a Churchyard."

ROUND ABOUT THE LOBBY

J. H. Chambers of Cottage Grove, three times mayor of that city, had been a lobbyist for the big mill men of that section and whose reputation for pulchritude is equal to that of Frank Davey who took occasion to exultate upon his Adonis-like facial adornments at Eugene upon the occasion of the recent junket to that city...

Representative Gordon, he of Lane, probably is responsible for the fact that Senate Bill No. 114, warmly endorsed by the other Representative Gordon, he of Multnomah, failed to receive the necessary votes to secure its passage.

Ex-Governor Oswald West visited the capitol Thursday, ostensibly for amusement only, but he must have had considerable on his mind, for when, after dinner, Mrs. West asked to be taken somewhere in the car, Hubby West had forgotten where he had left it.
