Others jumped into the fray, mentioning Wayne Wheeler, general counsel for the Anti-Saloon league. Mr. Good declared even this champion believed there were too many men on the rolls of the internal revenue bureau who were winking at violations.

"Mr. Wheeler will tell you the same thing he told me, that there are more wets than drys in the bureau, and yet he comes and demands that you vote more money for him," he said.

Mr. Wheeler, leaning over the gallery rail, smiled. Mr. Good continued:

The amount we have fixed will require dismissal of many agents who ought to be dismissed. More than 2,000 employes of the bureau are not standing up for the law.

Mr. Volstead, in reply, declared unless adequate funds were provided immediately, much of the force would have to be dropped.
