Thousands Destitute in Ireland

HOMELESS.

PRE-BLACKENED ruins now speckle the once smiling green surface of Ireland where more than 100 cities and towns have been wrecked and burned. The scourge of flames has left heaps of debris with occasional blank-windowed walls in place of acres of business buildings and homes in Cork and of whole communities such as Balbriggan, Grazard, Tralee and others.

Thousands of families have been driven half-clad from their burning homes at dead of night, to seek refuge in the fields and woods. Of those who escaped death by burning, many died of exposure after the terrorized flight into the winter outdoors, insufficiently clothed and undernourished.

EXPLORER AND HEAD HUNTER, AND WIFE OF LATTER.

Harold E. Anthony, well known naturalist, has returned to America from Ecuador, where he has been hunting rare birds and mammals for the American Museum of Natural History. His search took him across the Andes and down into the land of the head hunting, devil worshipping Jivaro Indians in southern Ecuador. These gentle creatures kill their enemies with poisoned arrows from blow guns and insure the rectitude of erring wives by pinning them to earth with lances, but from the standpoint of the American collector they have at least one good trait—they know birds, and helped the expedition to find out not only the indigenous varieties, but the migrants. He was gone nine months and brought back about 2,200 birds and 1,600 mammals, classification of which is expected to show several species new to science. The largest specimen is the skin of a speckled bear, the smallest a shrew. In the collection are a primitive marsupial no larger than a granary rat, a fish eating rat which goes under water and catches its prey, the vampire bat, found only in South America, and hundreds of birds of brightest color.

Advertising Irresistible

IF THERE IS one enterprise on earth that a "quitter" should leave severely alone, it is advertising. To make a success of advertising one must be prepared to stick like a barnacle on a boat's bottom. He should know before he begins it that he must spend money—lots of it. Somebody must tell him that he cannot hope to reap results commensurate with his expenditure early in the game. Advertising does not jerk; it pulls. It begins very gently at first, but the pull is steady. It increases day by day and year by year, until it exerts an irresistible power. —John Wanamaker.
