Polynesian Is Dying Fast And Race is Passing At High Speed

HONOLULU, T. H., Feb. 17,-Whence came the ancient Hawaiians and others of the Polynesian race, is a query which baffled the members of the Pan-Pacific scientific congress when it was in session here last August, and which is answered in part by Louis R. Sullivan, of the American Museum of Natural History, New York, who has been conducting investigations here since the close of the congress. Bodily, facial and cranial charadteristics of the Polynesian, according to Mr. Sullivan's tables, show that he is 11 parts Mongoloid, five parts European, five parts Mongoloid-European and two parts Mongoloid-Melanesian. The seemingly unavoidable con-

X-RAY OF EARTH'S ATMOSPHERE MADE

Observations of Magnetic Variations on Oceans Give Proof

SAN FRANCISCO, March 23 .-The Carnegie institution o' Washngton has just completed what might be termed an x-ray of the earth's atmosphere, and has forwarded from here all data in regard to the experiment, which was made through the use of the non-magnetic ship Carnegie, which arrived here recently.

The x-ray was in the form of observations of compass and other magnetic variations on all of the earth's oceans, these variations being traced in the atmosphere by two specially designed instruments called a deflector and magnometer. These tracings later will be shown on a chart, which might be likened to the x-ray plate: this chart will be made available to every navy and every merchant marine on earth as a guide to navigation, as near-ble to make such a guide. So intensively and penetratingly did the instruments work, aided by the uatter absence of magnetic attraction by everything else on the vessel, that certain degrees of longitude in the Indian ocean were found recently to be radically different from the best charts and projections available up to that time. In some instances these differences amounted to several minutes. There is a constant play of these variations over the magnetic fields, and the cause of this play or chance, although exhaustively theorized upon, never has been exactly explained, the Carnegie scientists said. These magnetic changes make the utilization of the non-magnetic ship and its instruments and the preparation of new charts constantly necessary. For instance a mariner using a magnetic chart prepared by the institution ten years ago could not steer as accurately as if he consulted a chart prepared but a year ago. The magnetic ship made an absolute myth out of the general belief that the compass always points directly north. It added convincing proof to the scientific theory that there are only two longitudinal lines, one of them extremely irregular, where such a thing occurs. Whenever a ship crosses one of these lines the west of north. In the taking of these figurative x-rays and the compilation of its data, sometimes interestingly geographical as well as a magnatic, the Carnegie has traveled more than 300,000 miles since she was launched June 12, 1969. She is the only vessel credited with having circumnavigated the globe in the sub-Anarctic regions. In this voyage, entirely within the confines of the Great Southern ocean, which has come to be the scientific name for the Antarctic, she stopped but once, that being at the island of Georg's, a whaling station in the Southern Pacife. On the present voyage, which began in October, 1919, she touched at French West A'rica. Buenos Aires, the island of St. Helena where Napoleon was exiled, Capetown, Ceylon, Australia, New Zealand, Papette, the Fanning Islands and San Francisco. She will go from here to Samoa influence on board, but it is so far away from the recording instruments that it has absolutely no effect on them. The Carnegie carries a complement of 23 persons. Captain J. P. Ault of Washington has full
