WHAT HER FATHER TOLD MADGE ON THE DAY OF CEL-EBRATION.

our "day on Broadway" -as he laughingly dubbed our outingalthough more than half our time was spent on other streets than the famous thoroughfare. had been so long a semi-invalid, shut away from the things he loved, that he was like a boy let loose in his enjoyment of the pleasures so long denied him.

One thing I noted with uneasiness, and that was his lavish expenditure of money. Knowing, as I did, that his income had been reduced to a meagre sum by his South American losses, I realized that he must be spending in this one day all the small savings he had managed by much scrimping to put by during the year. But there was a dignity, an authority in his manner that effectually kept me from remonstrating with

You've been a very dutiful, respectful daughter today, Margaret!" he said play ully, smiling at me across the flowers which he had ordered placed upon our ta-"You haven't expostulated with me upon my extravagance, although I've seen that you had a struggle to subdue your alarm. And now you shall have your reward. Things have taken a turn with your old dad I can well afford this today, although, of course, I wouldn't be warranted in doing this sort of thing often But upon the occasion of having the news confirmed of the rescue of some of the securities I had thought lost, I ought to be forgiven if I splurge a little, especally i' the dearest daughter in al! the world is my guest of honor.

"Thank you." The words were low but full of meaning. "I wonder if you can ever guess how proud I have been of you all so bravely put your shoulder to the wheel to help out the family bond with n ten days from the linances. But thank goodness, the necessity for that is over and cone with. I am not a rich man, degrest, not even as well situated as I was before, but at least I have enough so that you will not have to do anything to earn even your own pin money a'ter this. Of course, I honor your decision to keep on with your teaching because you had given your word to do so, but when your contract is ended there will be no necessity
