Dicky saw her first. He had been glad, indeed, to have been asthe moment the lights came on. and I pretended to share his interest, although I would have been glad, indeed, to have assured of the girl's absence from the place. "There she is!" my husband exclaimed in a tone which he forgot or didn't care to lower. At any rate it turned several heats in our direction, and made me draw back flushed and resentfully embarrassed at the attention of winter wheat but the conditions we were attracting. the older woman along to talk to me so that she could secure Dicky's undivided attention. "Don't worry," I assured him a whisper. "Alice Holcombe in a whisper. and I always have oceans of words to say to each other, so

"Oh. Dicky!" I expostulated, one of the dearest, sweetest-"I'll take your word for it. Dicky interrupted lazily. "Don't try to prove it to me. Besides, a woman as good looking as she is has no business to look as dowdy and old as she does tonight."

I looked at my friend, and was forced to acknowledge that Dicky's criticism was in part justifled. Alice Holcombe did look old, and she wasn't her usually well-groomed self. Her wonderful hair had evidently been done up hastily, she had on the same suit she had worn in her classroom that afternoon, and her whole appearance suggested that she had been lying down and had hastily arisen and come to the

The conviction came to me suddenly that this was just what she had done. With a little flame of anger at my heart I saw the whole mean little scheme of Bess Dean's as if I had been present when she had unfolded it. With the idea that her own youthful prettiness would stand out more strikingly against a foil, she must have purposely delayed her request to Alice Holcombe to join us until too late for the older woman to freshen her toilet. Another realization came over me. Alice Holcombe was too clever to allow her associate to use her unless she had a compelling motive for so doing. With a constriction of my throat I knew tha

might in some way aid me in a difficult situation. (To be continued)

PRATUM NOTES.

PRATUM, Or., April 28 .- (Special to The Statesman.) - Mr. and Mrs. Morgan drove to Silverton Sunday morning where they attended church. The four upper grades of the grade school spent a very enjoyable evening at a birthday party at the home of their teacher, Mrs. Carrie Branch, recently.

The monthly meeting of the Loyal Workers' Bible class which met at the home of Mrs. Alfred Hersch last Friday night, was of special interest. Apple blossom nd narcissus gave the decorations a pleasing effect. Over 70 members and visitors were present, among the visitors being Rev. and Mrs. Blinkensop of Salem. Rev. William Nicholl of Salem conducted the devotional service, which was very much appreciated and Rev. McNees, also of Salem, gave several interesting readings. A son by Mr. and Mrs. Morgan, a duet by Mrs. Paul Silke and Mrs. George Kleen were a few of the many interesting features of a
