The Rhode Island experiment station has also found that when a lawn seeding mixture consisting of Kentucky blue grass, redtop. Rhode island bent and white clover is seeded on a very acid soil and the lawn is fertilized annually with a basic fertilizer containing nitrate of soda, basic slag and muriate of potash, which reduces the degree of acidity and in time makes the soil non-acid. the blue grass and white clover persists because these plants grow test in a non-acid medium, or in a soil sufficiently supplied with

For acid-soil lawns in Rhode Island the experiment station at Kingston recommends the following fertilizer combination for establishing lawns under average "Two hundred fifty pounds sulfate of ammonia, 400 pounds acid phosphate and 250 pounds of muriate of potash to the acre. A smaller quantity than this should be used on newly seeded lawns."

In general, it can be said that when a lawn is to be made principally of blue grass and white clover it is necessary to first see to it that the soil is sufficiently supplied with lime; and so long as such a soil condition prevails, any fertilizer which supplies available fertilizing elements can be used. Under very acid conditions and without lime, on the other hand.
