ICE CREAM IS CHEAPER HERE

Cost is 75 Cents a Gallon Less Than in Portland, Says Dealer

NEW MACHINES GOING IN

Buttercup Company Doubles Capacity — Milk Shipment Tremendous

Salem buys ice cream 75 cents a gallon cheaper, at retail prices, than does the city of Portland, a reduction of 25 per cent—which is a lot, considering that a drop of 2 cents, or 7 per cent, in the price of flivver fuel creates a real furor.

And the figures show that Salem appreciates the chance. For the Buttercup Ice Cream Company, the big producer of the valley, recently doubled its freezing capacity by installing a second Progress freezer, and a new 300-gallon pre-cooling vat is being set up to be ready by the time the hot season really arrives.

Cream Mixed in Portland

The "cream" comes from the Crystal Ice company at Portland, where it is mixed ready for flavoring and freezing. A plant properly to care for this basis preparation is estimated to cost $150,000 and the "Eat a Plate a Day" plan is not quite that proportion. The flavoring, freezing, packing and general distribution is local, however.

Coming from Portland in 10-gallon cans the cream goes through the pre-cooling vat that in 20 minutes will chill it almost to the freezing point. The vat has a rotating pipe coil, through which the sodium brine or freezing solution is passed under pressure. Then the cream goes to the freezer where it is agitated and frozen down to a temperature of about 23 degrees Fahrenheit, the "freezing brine" mixture supplying the cold element for the process. It is then a thick sluggish liquid.

How Bricks Are Made

From the freezer it goes to the delivery cans, which come in assorted sizes, all the way from one to 10 gallons. Some of the cream is pressed in brick form; the thick, frozen liquid is poured into molds, either singly or in gangs, then covered with a close-fitting top, and the freezing process is continued in the "cold room," where the temperature can be sent down to zero. All the filled receivers, whether of bulk or of brick product, are given their final "chill" in the "cold room."

Then the cans may be corded up on racks, like so much firewood, without a chance in the world of their leaking. The different flavors are kept, each in its respective place, so that a vast quantity of cream can be handled with a minimum of labor.

Consumer May Cut Cost

Manager Gregory says that the consumer could do a lot towards making ice cream less expensive. For instance, a metal receiver that is not washed and dried when it is emptied will soon rust, and then it has to be retinned, which is an expensive process. As one of the items of unnecessary cost which have to go somewhere into the ice cream business, he says that this waste, if eliminated, might well go to reducing the sale price. The depreciation of the plant he figured at 25 per cent a year. He found that taking this can matter along with everything else, the actual depreciation is close to 32 per cent.

Milk Trade Big

The Marion Creamery next door to the ice cream factory, has built up a large export milk trade, based on the ice cream business. Up to about four years ago, the cream base used here, was gathered nearer Portland, and there was no sale of milk from this locality. Now, with the growth of this local ice cream business, the creamery is shipping 14,000 pounds of milk a day to the companies in Portland that does the mixing. A splendid market for whole milk, that until four years ago did not exist, has grown up from this local enterprise, and it has helped to make every dairy farm in the valley more prosperous.

AT THE LIBRARY

New Books

"Autobiography of Andrew Carnegie," by Sydney Greenbie. The A. L. A. Booklist describes this book in an interesting way: "A charming and book romantic with gushes and rickshaws, at the same time shattering our illusions about imaginary Japan with so clever a hand that it leaves it more human and less picturesque in our minds. The author lived among the plain people of Kobe as a business man, writer and teacher of English during the war."

"Four Months Afoot in Spain," another book of his experiences by Harry A. Franck whose "Vagabond Journey Around the World," introduced him to the reading public. His popularity has continued with the publication of "Vagabonding Through Changing Germany," and "Roaming Through the West Indies."

"The Pleasures of Collecting," his excursions in search of antiquities and curious lore connected with his treasures which range from samplers to Japanese
