Club women of Salem and of the entire state are disappointed to know that Mrs. J. W. Sadler of Aurora will not be a candidate for re-election on the board of the Oregon Federation of Women's Clubs. Mrs. Sadler is one of the popular women of the federation and her work has been untiring during the years she has been in the club work. She has been ill recently but is now improving.

The Women's Republican Study club met Monday afternoon with Mrs. C. P. Bishop, Judge George

Mrs. Brown talking to the ladies on the proposed amendments and legislation to come up at the election next month. He also spoke on the advantage of organization in the successful campaign.

Mrs. C. P. Bishop will go to Hood River today to attend the graduation exercises of the senior class of Hood River high school, of which her nephew, Harry Kay Roberts, is a member. The graduation exercises are on Wednesday. On the following day Mrs. Bishop will go on to Pendleton to visit her son, Chauncey Bishop, and attend the exhibit of Oregon products on Saturday. She is a delegate to the Federation of Women's Clubs state convention which is to be held in Pendleton May 31, June 1, 2 and 3 from the Salem Women's club and will remain over in the Round-Up city for that.

Mrs. R. J. Hendricks is at Aurora, where she has been since last Thursday, at the bedside of George Kraus, her brother-in-law, one of the pioneer residents of that section, who is very ill.

Mr. and Mrs. A. N. Bush left Sunday for San Francisco to spend a month or six weeks. They were accompanied by Miss Eliza Nolan. While in the south the party will be domiciled at the Palace hotel.

MY HEART AND MY HUSBAND

Adele Garrison's New Phase Of REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

CHAPTER VI

WHY MADGE'S EFFORTS TO KEEP MRS. STOCKBRIDGE AMUSED FAILED.

"Is there anything I can do for you?"
Milly Stockbridge's voice was smooth and pleasant, but her eyes narrowed as she looked at me from her husband's chair. I feared that the absurd suspicion of her husband which often assailed her was again swaying her.
"Of course, I am not Kenneth," she went on smiling in what she evidently intended to be a playful manner, but which gave instead the impression of insufferable impertinence. "but I can attempt to answer any question you have come to ask him."

I ignored the covert insolence, laughing lightly as I walked toward the telephone.
"You cannot only attempt," but go to the head of the class on the question," I retorted. "I came down to use the telephone to order some ice cream for lunch. I am the only one off duty at just this time, so Miss Holcombe asked me to see it. It's the only thing extra we can get on such short notice. If you could have let us know yesterday that you were coming we could have provided something worth while. As it is, I'm afraid you will find 'siltm pickings' as the old people say, except for the good things you have brought yourself."

I took down the telephone receiver from the hook without waiting for any further comment, and gave my order with outward nonchalance but inward trepidation. What her demeanor would be when I turned around to face her I had no idea, and I dreaded infinitely the finding out. But to my surprise and relief, she had accepted my explanation without question. I surmised that her mentality had enough childishness in it to be diverted by the thought that we were planning something extra to eat in her honor. At any rate, she was the embodiment of pleasant gratification when I faced her.

Childlike Delight.
"Aren't you girls lovely!" she cried. "Ice Cream! We'll have a real party, won't we? But you shouldn't be so extravagant for poor little me."
"It isn't often we have the privilege of entertaining you at luncheon," I said forcing my voice and manner to hearty cordiality, for the hypocrisy of which I loathed myself. "You must allow us a little expression of our pleasure. I only wish we could do something worth while."
She sprang up, with eyes sparkling, skipped lightly over to me and squealed my arm affectionately. "I had to put an iron restraint upon my muscles to keep from visibly shrinking at her touch, so strong was my dread of the woman.

"What dears you all are!" she exclaimed. "Come on, let's go upstairs now and begin to get ready. I suppose you eat in the same old place, the teachers' rest room? I haven't been there for an age. Kenneth is such a crank about—"
"Yes, we always have lunch there," I interrupted hastily, for I wished to give her no chance to dwell upon any fancied injustice on her husband's part. "And we have the dearest electric grill and toaster when we bought this year. They are a new kind with some odd little features that I'm sure will interest you. We're quite mad about them."

I was talking against time, and was thankful indeed when my ruse succeeded. She was all childish excitement as she gathered together the bundles she had brought but stopped abruptly, evidently at some distracting thought, before a small private desk of Mr. Stockbridge's, which stood beside the big roll top one provided by the school.

"What's this?" she asked sharply. "Something new? I don't remember seeing this before. How long has this been here, Miss Ackerson?"
She turned abruptly to the older teacher correcting papers near the window. Miss Ackerson looked up uneasily.
"About a year," she said quietly.

"Did the school board purchase it, or is it Mr. Stockbridge's own property?"
I would have given a good deal to have signalled a warning to Miss Ackerson, but I couldn't do it without the risk of being seen by Mrs. Stockbridge. All the teachers had gossiped among themselves about this specially made desk which Mr. Stockbridge had installed in his office. Part of it was accessible to the teachers, and was used for school records of various kinds. But one side of it was kept for the principal's own use, and we rarely saw him lock or unlock it. Bess Dean had once extravagantly declared her belief that he had a secret drawer hidden in its recesses, but to one had paid any attention to her words except to laugh derisively at her.

The mere fact of the desk's existence, however, was enough to excite Milly Stockbridge's jealousy.

I waited breathlessly for Miss Ackerson's reply.

Chairman Williams Will Conduct Medford Hearing

Fred A. Williams, chairman of the state public service commission, will conduct a hearing at Medford May 27 on application of the Grants Pass Irrigation district for a lower service rate from the California-Oregon Power company for pumping water to the district lands. The company cut off the service for a time because of a disagreement with the district and crops began to suffer. The service was resumed on orders of the service commission pending the hearing.

TARIFF BILL TO PRESIDENT

Emergency Measure Passes House and is Sent to The President

OPPOSITION VERY SMALL

Executive Expected to Attach Name to Measure Mr. Wilson Vetoed

WASHINGTON, May 23.—The long battle in congress over the emergency tariff bill ended today when the house by a vote of 245 to 97, adopted the conference report to which the senate had agreed. The measure was sent to the White House, where it is expected to be signed soon by the president.

The emergency measure passed at the last session was vetoed by President Wilson, but re-introduced in the present extra session.

Farm Products Affected
It carries tariff duties on 39 odd farm products together with compensatory duties on articles manufactured from them. It also empowers the secretary of the treasury to employ penalties in staying off dumping of foreign-made goods, continues the war time control over importations of dyes and operates to clarify tangles in the assessment of duties which result from fluctuating exchange rates.
Retaliation Predicted.
During the long debate opponents of high tariff predicted retaliatory action by Canada, South America and some nations of Europe.
Only slight opposition appeared as the bill went into the roll call
