Willamette University Students Play Shakespeare With Credit in Presentation of "Julius Caesar"

"Julius Caesar" still lives in the hearts of men, as he did when the cohorts marched out over the Alps and the burning sands of ancient Rome, and the eagle banner flew in every sky that knew the face of man, as he did when Shakespeare uncovered the man who had been buried for 15 centuries, and brought the story back to throbbing life.

The presentation of the play at Willamette chapel, last night, and the breathless nervous hush that held the audience in tight focus at the end of the play, are proof that it will never, never die—that great Caesar's ghost still has power to make men pause and wonder what's coming next—and be almost glad when he's gone, for it's too creepy for him to stay too long.

Real Genius Shown. The play was staged by the public speaking department of the university, with a cast of 17 named characters and the "rabble" that was not named. It was presented in the Old Greek style with no fancy fol-de-rols to distract from or accentuate the situations; one had to make 'em out of his own head. They were splendidly so made; some of the presentations would be accredited to genius on any stage.

Caesar himself is only a minor physical character in the play; he is a presence, a spiritual force, that lives on from the first to the last, and on through the centuries. The part was well taken by Bernard Morse.

Cassius, however, and Brutus, are the outstanding figures—they and Marc Antony. The lead, the hungry, nervous Cassius was wonderfully played by J. Fred McGrew, the more ponderous, upright Brutus was well portrayed by Roy Skeing, and the original Marc Antony had the voice and manner of Virgil Anderson. There was no wonder that the plotters were overthrown by the fickle

The fish are said to be actually more plentiful than usual, through the careful conservation of the fish and game department; and the fisherman breaks from nothing plunk into the heart of the best fishing season without having to wade along through had weather and indifferent fish through the early months of the year. Bass fishermen expect to establish one record this season in the sloughs and bayous along the Willamette, and in the other waters where the bass are to be found.

COLUMBIA WINS FROM SALEMITES

High School Boys Unable to Support Ashby in Portland Yesterday
Failure to support Ashby, the pitcher, yesterday lost for the Salem high baseball nine the third and championship game with Columbia university of Portland by a score of 9 to 0, thereby losing all claim to the state and Pacific northwest championship honors. Ashby fanned 17 men during the game and pitched air-tight ball and did splendid work at the bat.

Salem played poorly throughout the whole game. Unlike the second game with Columbia which was played here it was not mostly a matter of luck. Salem was unable to hold up to its standard of fast playing held in the first game and was beaten by sheer inability to play the game. Smith, the Columbia pitcher, was the star for the Portlanders.

The game yesterday completes the schedule for the local team. In the first game with Columbia last Thursday at Portland Salem defeated the university men 7 to 4. In the return game played here Saturday Salem was defeated by a 3 to 1 score.

BOOSTER CLUB WORKS FOR GYM

Three Hundred Willamette Students Determined on New Building
Three hundred students, most of them boys but a number being of their game co-ed sisters, pledged themselves to go on with the Boosters' club for the Willamette gymnasium, at the chapel services yesterday forenoon.

The board of trustees has not yet met to say formally what the financial situation will be, or rather who will build the building that everybody knows is going to be built; but the boosters are laying out their work in a systematic manner. Each booster is to interview at least 10 good prospects, and wheedle or argue or sandbag from each one a generous subscription to the gym fund.

An important chapel meeting is to be held this morning, beginning at 11 o'clock, earlier than usual. The occasion will be the announcement of the nominees for the new senior honor society, the Alpha Kappa Nu. This society was instituted last year, and is to removed from Oregon state highways. It will have new hospital built by private capital. Baker sawmill enlarges force to 300 men. London - Butte Creek ranch sells 110,000 pounds of wool for 18 cents.

Once They Laughed. One had to forget a lot in finding some of the titles to the old Roman, 15 centuries before eye-witnesses were invented. Three of the headlines were such glasses as never Roman senator dreamed of. However, if they had stiffs, or pinch-back coats or stiffs, or had carried a machine pistol, or machine gun, it would not have seemed out of place; for the atmosphere of Old Rome herself lived through the whole performance, and the externals didn't count.

There was one laugh—when the two friends dragged the noble Casar off stage to exhibit him to the populace. Few people can die, entirely dead, with grace and conviction, and a heavy body is going to be handled pretty awkwardly by an amateur undertaker. The noble Casar couldn't help himself—he was in the hands of his friends, like many a "dead one" in politics and other walks of life, and the people who saw him laughed. Maybe it was a nervous, hysterical laughter, because of his recent bloody massacre—but they really laughed.

Interest Intense. The play showed a long, careful study both for the physical effects and the spiritual atmosphere. It was splendidly rendered; it is indeed a credit to the performers, and to the department and its director, Nina L. Harding, who had given it her personal attention.

It is a man's play, mostly; there were only three woman characters, all of which were delightfully given. The costuming was accurate, as nearly as the writer can remember of ancient Rome; and the breathless, soundless interest of the audience was an eloquent "speaking" testimonial to the appreciation of those who heard.

comprise not more than 20 per cent of the membership of each succeeding graduating class, the winners to be named by the faculty after a competitive study of records—class, social and in general college service during four full years. Dr. Boulton, of the University of Washington, is to be here to deliver the address on this occasion.

The 10 names for 1921 have been selected from the class of '55, and will represent the highest honor that the university can officially give. The nomination is open only for seniors, as the terms call for a full four years' record. The public is invited to attend the presentation ceremony.

FRENCHMAN PLAYS TAG WITH RABBIT
Carpenter Gives Poilu War Cry and Pursues When Bunny Appears
MANHASSET, N. Y., June 7.—Georges Carpentier engaged in a game of tag with a wild rabbit today and won.
Off to an early start to the woods with his sparring partner, the challenger climbed a few trees, then started across country in search of new sports. He jumped a rabbit, gave a polka bottle cry and started in pursuit. It doubled and started into the woods and Georges pounced upon it. Picking it up by the ears, he said:
"That was a good workout; I will be just as elusive as you on July 2."
This afternoon Carpentier spent an hour in the gymnasium, shadow boxing, rope jumping and bag punching.
Carpentier believes he is in better condition for a championship battle than at any time in his career.
"I could be ready for Dempsey in a week," he said.
ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., June 7.—Jack Dempsey illustrated the power of his punches and his shift in his workout today. He gave the punching bag a drubbing in addition to two rounds of shadow boxing and driving blows at the 60-pound felt stuffed bag for a round.
For the first time he used his shift while punching the bag, and he ripped terrific left and right hooks into it.
Dempsey intends to resume
