MY HEART AND MY HUSBAND

Adele Garrison's New Phase Of REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

CHAPTER 93 THE WAY LILLIAN PLAYED HER CARDS.

If I had planned deliberately to infuriate a man who had slurred my dead mother, my success could not have been greater than the result which followed my passionate declaration of my father's real sentiments toward herself and me.

Evidence of the twenty years which had elapsed since the ending of the sordid chapter of her association with my father had not dimmed the tigerish jealousy of him and hatred of my mother which had actuated her in her long ago time. That hot jealousy and hatred were rooted in her vanity and mercenary calculation—redeemed by no gleam of the real divine spark of love which sometimes illumines an otherwise cold and intricate character.

She made a quick movement toward me, her fingers working perceptibly. "You lying devil!" she screamed. "I'll tear your eyes out if you hand me anything more like that. What do you know?"

Lillian had moved as swiftly as she, stepping in front of me as the infuriated woman launched her tirade of invective. In the background, Allen Drake had made a swift step forward, but at Lillian's movement remained where he was, the picture of indolent inattention, although I knew that he could and would reach the woman and shake her in an instant if the occasion required such strenuous action.

"We'll just wind up this reel right now," Lillian said decidedly. "You're clever at melodrama, Mrs. Drake, but unfortunately our tastes run to innocuous, comfortable, comedy dramas. So please don't bite any more chunks out of the landscape. Instead, we'll get right down to brass tacks for a few minutes. Madge, dear, please take that easy chair near Mr. Drake and sit yourself down. You're wasting valuable emotion and nerve force on something distinctly not worth while."

I never have heard a tone so absolutely flaying in its effect as the cool, emotionless drawl in which Lillian couched her ultimatum. The angry woman before me was shrewd enough to see that no weapon in her emotional arsenal was penetrating enough to pierce Lillian's armor. She turned her eyes on Lillian with a calculating stare, evidently debating what was best to do, waiting a long moment before she spoke.

"You're making a good bluff on 'deuces," she said at last. "Suppose I call you. Let's see your hand. You can bet the last cent in your coin purse that I don't give in till I'm beaten, and then the cards have to be stacked against me."

"They don't have to be stacked," Lillian retorted coolly. "We hold too high cards."

"All right, play 'em," Lillian stepped to the table, picked up a little pile of cancelled checks and other papers, rifled them, and handed two or three to the woman.

"Payments of Mr. Graham to you recently," she said quietly. "Exhibit A."

"Not good enough," the woman retorted. "I tell you those are presents on account of his affection for me. You can't prove them otherwise, because even if I'm lying you don't want to let him know his precious daughter has seen me."

"You're lying all right," Lillian returned evenly. "And that's only a ten-spot anyway. But before going on to the next one, let me tell you something you evidently don't know. Mr. Spencer has for years been known as Robert Gordon. He has been so high up in the service of his country that the biggest men obeyed him like a schoolmaster. He has the power to throw you into jail a mile deep if he wanted to and keep you there a hundred years. But he idolizes his wife and her as he did her mother before her—made no mistake about that. We've worked together. I know his story, know that he has lived in agonized remorse for twenty years because of the wife he lost because of the wrong he had done her, but whom he adored hopelessly, devotedly."

"And because he didn't wish his daughter to know even that you lived, he has submitted to your blackmail—we'll just call it by its right name. He is getting old, isn't he? He's getting vigorous and he would never have fallen for your extortions. And now I'm not going to waste a minute more time on you. We'll play the ace right now."

She nodded to Allen Drake. He walked to the door and called softly to the man in the hall. (To be continued.)

GOOD FOR WOMEN, TOO Foley Cathartic Tablets have long been a favorite physic with men. Women suffer as much as men do from indigestion and constipation, and they also require a scientific remedy to keep the stomach sweet, the liver active and the bowels regular. Mrs. George Powers, 84 Winthrop Ave., Revere, Mass., writes: "I have taken Foley's Cathartic Tablets and I recommend them to everybody." They banish biliousness, headache, bloating.—Sold everywhere.—Adv.

Road is Barricaded at Divide, Report Says The state highway department has advised that the Warren Construction company has begun paving from its Comstock plant at Divide, Douglas county, and that it is now necessary to close the road at that point during working hours, except that traffic is allowed through at 10 a. m. and 5 p. m. There are no detours available for traffic. Signs will be posted accordingly. It is said the same condition will exist at Drain from about June 22 or 23.

Status of Patients is Ruled On By Opinion In the opinion of the state board of control, Attorney General Van Winkle has advised that after the discharge of a patient from the state hospital for the insane and her removal to the state of Washington, she became a resident of that state. Consequently, it is held that although the patient's sister desired to have her returned to the Oregon institution there is no obligation on the part of the state of Oregon to receive her back as a ward. It is held that a request of the deportation agent of the state of Washington that he be authorized to return her here should be denied.

340 Accidents; Two Fatalities Reported A total of 340 accidents were reported to the state industrial accident commission for the week ending June 16 and two of them were fatal. The fatalities were Harry E. Eckenstein, Medford, warehouseman, and Frank Joerg, Cocharan, logger.

English Consumers Find Oregon Prune Unexcelled Having purchased more than 1,000,000 pounds of prunes packed under the Mistland brand from the Oregon Growers' Co-operative association this past season, one of the largest firms in England writes the association as follows: "Your Mistland have on the whole been very satisfactory with regard to quality and size. Practically every one of our buyers is well satisfied and speaks highly of them. As far as Oregon prunes are concerned, there is nothing to beat your pack this year."

Opinion Rules Against Transfer of Patients There is no provision of law that authorizes the state board of control to enter into an agreement with the state of California to the effect that a patient now in an insane hospital in California may be transferred to Oregon in care of his sister, with the proviso that in Oregon he should become insane in Oregon he would be returned to California without expense to Oregon. This is the substance of an opinion by Attorney General Van Winkle written for the state board of control.

SUMMARY GIVEN OF AID STATUTE

Total of $916,638 Paid Out And 5545 Benefitted, Statement Shows

Sam A. Koser, secretary of state, has issued a statement relative to educational aid for ex-service men in Oregon, showing that up to June 15, this year, a total of $916,638.65 has been paid by the state in educational aid under an act approved by the people at a special election in June, 1919. A total of 5545 former soldiers have been benefited by the act, and that have attended a total of 117 schools in the state.

Attendance at the institutions has ranged from one at some of the schools to 1271 at Oregon Agricultural college. The University of Oregon has had 677 students on its roster who have come under the act.

The demands on the fund will now be considerably lightened for the reason that many of the state university and agricultural college students have completed their work. Further, the bonus law, recently enacted by the people, requires that any sums heretofore contributed by the state for educational aid or other purposes must be refunded in order to receive the benefits of the bonus and loan law.

Below is shown the number of men attending schools in Marion and Polk counties under the aid act and the amounts of money that have been received by the institutions in their behalf:

Capital Business college, 97, $11,310.05; Hubbard high school, 3, $958.33; Kimball School of Theology, 1, $375; Monmouth high school, 1, $200; Mount Angel college, 1, $300; Oregon Normal school, 11, $1862.30; Salem high school, 28, $6756.25; Salem Indian school, 7, $1285; Silverton high school, 6, $680; Stayton high school, 5, $875.32; Willamette university 192, $25,015.42; Woodburn high school, 1, $150.
