

BATTLES OF DEMPSEY AND CARPENTIER

No. 7
 Jack Dempsey and Jess Willard met for the world heavyweight championship at Toledo, O., July 4, 1919. The day was miserably hot. Thermometers at the ring side registered as high as 120 degrees. The big arena, constructed to seat 75,000 persons, contained only a few hundred more than 19,000. The gate receipts, however, insured the financial success of the project.

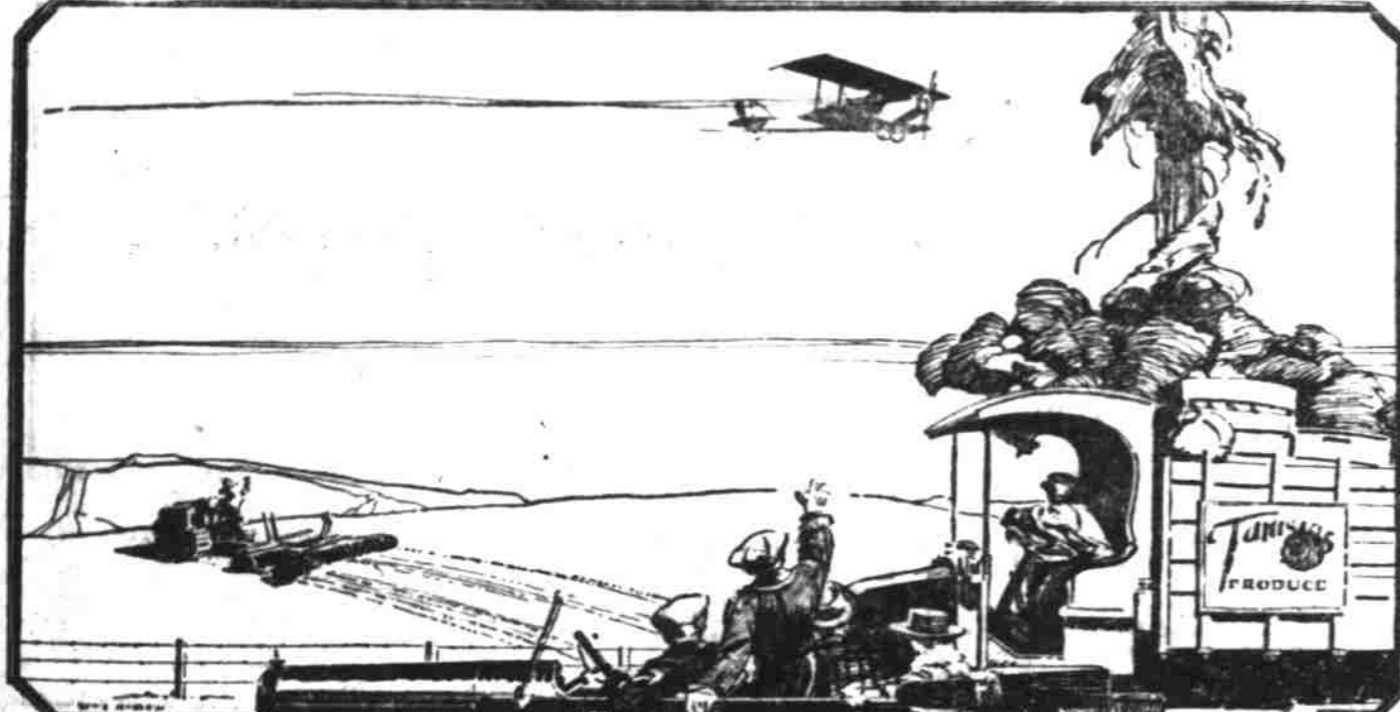

There was a marked contrast in the demeanor of the boxer as they entered the ring. Jess Willard, the champion, was almost arrogantly confident. He approached the ring with a sure stride, climbed through the ropes and gazed calmly out on the crowd with the suggestion of a confident smile playing around his mouth. Dempsey's manner was more serious. A scowl, which visitors at his Atlantic City training camp been knocked out. Dempsey even failed to leave the ring, believing that he was the victor. There has been doubt as to whether he actually rose out of the ring. Willard's only head and both arms were cut off. He was unable to get up and for the remainder of the fight he was unable to get up. A crowd of 19,000 people, including the mayor of Toledo, were present. The fight was a disaster for Willard. He was knocked out in the fourth round. The Frenchman declares that the first three minutes of that match were the worst he ever experienced in the ring. Wells knocked Carpenter down for a count of nine in the first round. Spectators were amazed when the Frenchman regained his feet. Hanging on, he weathered the storm. He stalled through the second, felt out his man in the third and found that the stomach was his opponent's vulnerable spot. In the fourth, after about a minute of action, Carpenter fainted for the jaw. Wells lifted his guard and Carpenter shot a right to the mid-section that sent Wells down and out. It was a remarkable show of pluck and recuperative power on the part of the Frenchman still in his teens. On account of the more or less prevalence of prohibition the sea serpents off the coast are running smaller this year than usual.

LEAD ARSENATE IS WORM KILLER

Professor Lovett Prescribes Sure Cure for Bug on Loganberries
 Only an ill-bred, scoundrelly bug or worm would attack a 2-1-2 cent a pound loganberry, but there are worms just like that, as this letter from Prof. O. L. Lovett, entomologist at Agricultural college, to C. A. Park, president of the state horticultural society, will prove. Maybe the worms missed the calendar and thought they were eating logans at 13 cents a pound raw. At any rate, they are trying to grab off the juice industry that made Salem famous, and the authorities are now on their trail, as follows: "Your letter of June 23, with accompanying specimens of green worms from the foliage of loganberry plants is at hand. "In response I would say that this is a very common and general offender, feeding mostly on the foliage of raspberries and logan berries. Mr. Van Trump reports it as particularly common in Marion county this year. In fact, we have found it in Lane, Washington, Clackamas and a number of counties where small fruits are grown. Some five weeks ago I sent out publicly through the newspapers, stating the presence of this pest and the desirability of spraying with arsenate of lead just at this time when the berries are ripening. The ideal standard treatment for the control of this raspberry and loganberry saw fly is arsenate of lead, applied at a strength of one and one-half pounds to 50 gallons of water, using an angle nozzle and throwing
