The Well Dressed Woman

By GEORGE SWANSON, Star in Paramount Pictures.

I fancy you will end by thinking me quite mad on the subject of things Spanish. Perhaps I am; why not? Think how many generations have worn the Spanish shawl, think of all the romance, all the Old World glamour, all the adventure, all the pathos and the tragedy that have been hidden in its folds. And then all association and sentiment thrown aside, look at it, look well, for the pure beauty and grace of the thing itself. Never since the splendor of Greece have we had any single garment that was so near artistic perfection. Not one line of your figure need be hidden, nor one fold placed save where it is becoming to you. And then the wonder of their color.

The country has gone quite as mad as I have over them; in fact, I think some of the modistes are more mad, mad as March hares.

You see them everywhere, in all the shops, and one very exclusive place had nothing else save shawls in their window for the space of a whole week.

The one in the sketch was shown draped, just so, in one of the really good shop windows. It is a charming and becoming way of wearing it, and just as I don mine in the evening.

Mine is one of those vivid orange scarlet ones that Carmen loved and is gorgeously embroidered in reds and greens and yellows, as only a Spaniard would dare. Do you remember how our ancestors wore shawls in Godey's Magazine? To me it has always seemed a perfect exposition of the faults of their puritanical provincialism.

One That Munchausen Missed "Some of the promises made by candidates," said Bellingham Bray the efficiency expert, at the New York Athletic club, "are as fantastic as Farmer Haricot's shooting story. Describing a pest of birds which had made their appearance on his farm, Haricot said to a neighbor:

"I was very much troubled with these winged thieves, for they made terrible havoc among my corn. I put scarecrows up till I was tired; then I took my gun, loaded it with powder and shot and you should have seen the quantity I brought down. But the next morning my boy rushed in-doors and yelled:

"Dad, hundreds of birds in the corn again."

"I grabbed down my gun, put in the powder, but I couldn't find any shot, so I thrust in a handful of tacks and off I ran. Getting to the corn, I yelled hard and up flew the birds into a tree. I fired and blamed if all the birds were not nailed to the tree, with their wings flapping as if flying. Struck with the sight, I stood watching them, when—I could hardly believe my eyes—the blessed things pulled up the tree and flew away with it!"—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

NO FIRES START ON JULY FOURTH

State Forester Reports That Campers Have Left Behind Clean Record

It was the safest and sanest Fourth of July for at least a year, and perhaps for a number of years, according to the state forester's fire records.

Not one fire was reported from any of the Oregon camping grounds July 4. Thousands of campers, some of them infinitely greener than a leek or a barrel of water-cress, visited the forests Sunday or Monday for a riotous, fire-cracking celebration.

They never touched it. They didn't start a single blaze. If they had hot dogs for lunch, or a pot of coffee for which they built too much fire, nevertheless the fire didn't get away and start a holocaust. Every blaze seems to have burned its normal supply of fuel, and then gone quietly out like a tramp effacing himself from the back yard where the brindled bulldog is running loose.

Eight or ten fires that a warden could spit on and drown have been found in the forests and eradicated just like that. The damage would be rather less than nothing so far for the season; an exceptionally favorable year in every way, up until midsummer at least.

The credit is not all due to the Solomon's discretion of the campers, however, or the fireless brand of firecrackers sold nowadays, but rather to the fact that it's been raining in the mountains so that fires couldn't start, and on top of that there is the vigilance of the fire wardens who have made it their business to see 'em first. The fire that gets by the diligent wardens is going away and with a malevolent and intentional start.
