CHAPTER 110

WHAT HAPPENED AFTER RITA BROWN WENT TO TELEPHONE.

"Here's your drug shop," Alfred swung the car to the side of the road, drew up in front of a village pharmacy as if he had been driving a car for years.

"And here's your mazzum." He held out a paper. "I should so like to help you." "Oh, I don't want that! I'll only have to get it changed." Rita Brown spoke petulantly. I surmised that she was glad of an excuse to vent her resentment against Alfred Durkee.

"Allow me, old dear," Dicky sprang to his feet, held out some silver to the girl, then opened the door and assisted her to the ground with a sweeping flourish of his hat. "May I assist you in telephoning, hold the receiver to your shell-like ear or my little thing like that? I should so like to help you." Dicky's voice expressed the most elaborate concern.

I wished that he would forego his love of teasing in this particular instance for the girl's eyes were smoldering with wrath. She was in no mood for pleasantry of any description.

Dicky Would Bet. She had accepted the silver coins with a cool, crisp "Thank you." She turned on Dicky now with a look that spelled anger rising almost to the danger point.

"Suppose you close your trap and bolt it!" she said raucously with a reversion to the type from which I suspected she had been bred, and turning upon her heel walked haughtily into the drug store.

"Dear chee-ld! I'm so afraid she's upset about something," Dicky's face was like an undertaker's, his voice a piping falsetto. "What can it be? Allice, you naughty, naughty boy, why didn't you let her have the seat by your side?"

Alfred spread his hands toward Leila, nodded his head smilingly, but vouchsafed no other answer. The Virginia girl's cheeks vied in color with the berries she had been hulling before the mill. Dicky regarded her quizzically. I was afraid he would make some other teasing remark to her, rose to my feet quickly, seizing the first excuse I could think of to divert Dicky's attention.

"Oh, Dicky, there's a display of those rubbers for the canning jars which mother and Mrs. Durkee wanted so much? See, in that grocery window. We couldn't get them in the Marvin stores. Let's hurry. We can get them by the time Miss Brown finishes her telephoning."

"Anything to oblige you, petty-dear." When Dicky is in a teasing mood he generally invents some ridiculous "pet name" with which to address me, knowing my abhorrence of public endearments. But as we walked toward the grocery store he dropped his affected manner abruptly.

"Bet you a fiver we see the last of Her Grace of Greenwich tonight," he said in a voice meant for my ear only.

"What do you mean?" I asked startled. "What I say. She'll fly the coop tonight." "But she's made all plans to stay days longer."

That was when she still had an idea she might cop old Alf out when he wasn't looking, or had forgotten to cross his fingers. But she isn't quite bone from her neck up, you know, and anybody who wasn't sold ivory above the shoulder blades would deduce

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy and attractive with a brush of Sage and Sulphur Compound. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied, with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, all ready for use, at very little cost. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well-known downtown drug-gist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally, and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied—it's so easy to use. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw through the hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color, and looks glossy, soft and beautiful.

Livingston's family lives in this city. He related in court yesterday how several years ago his family had tried to take him to Roseburg, and when he had revolted they had him sent to the reform school "to learn a trade." "But I didn't learn anything," he said bitterly. "The judge told me that they would let me out in six months, but they didn't."

Following a severe upbraiding, Judge Burgh gave him the minimum sentence for larceny. He will serve his sentence in county jail.

NIGHTIES BECOME STREET CLOTHES

Russian Officer With Cane And Monocle Struts In Pajamas

CONSTANTINOPLE, June 17.—An American Red Cross and army pajamas are being converted into jaunty street clothes here by ingenious Russian refugee soldiers and civilians.

Hugh S. Hird, treasurer of the Red Cross, when here on a visit of inspection to dispose of a large quantity of supplies laid up in the war-houses, saw a speck and spotted individual in a room, flourishing a cane and ranning himself with a straw hat, at the local Red Cross offices asking for some mail.

The officer looked so well put up that Mr. Hird stopped feeling sorry for the Russians for a moment, until he took a second look at his clothes. He saw then that

"Oh, no, he doesn't know she's on hand," he began, hesitatingly, then abruptly changed his manner.

"I don't remember ever seeing old Alf quite so sitting up and talking quite so much notice," he said reflectively. "I only hope the Fairfaxes won't go when the Brown departs."

"What makes you think she's going?" I persisted. "Intuition, life-of-me-heart. I know as well as if I were listening to her that she's arranging with somebody in cold blood to meet at somebody in your old Greenwich village to send her an urgent summons home tonight."

TAXI DRIVER IS GIVEN 30 DAYS

Roy Livingston Sentenced After Hearing in Justice Court Yesterday

With tears rolling down his cheeks, Roy Livingston, 20-year-old Salem taxi driver arrested on a charge of larceny, heard a 30-day sentence imposed upon him by Judge Uruth in the justice court yesterday. Livingston was arrested Tuesday on a charge of stealing three motor meters and two auto tires.

"I couldn't get a job and I was broke—I had to have the money," young Livingston told the judge yesterday when asked in his examination why he had taken the goods. "I never stole anything before, but I had to have shoes and clothes."

"How much did you get for the goods," he was asked. "Seventeen dollars," he replied. "35 one time and 17 another."

In the story which he told the court yesterday Livingston said that last Saturday night Lee Davis, local taxi driver for whom he had previously worked, asked him to ride out to the skating rink with him while he took another person to the dance. He consented and rode to the rink.

There, he said, he had seen the meters and the thought entered his mind that he might steal them and buy food and clothes. He quickly took them off and going back to the car, rode into town with Davis. He claimed that he had not gone to the rink with an intent to steal, but that desperation led him to take them.

Asked why he had not sold the meters, he replied that "I didn't have time."

Livingston's family lives in this city. He related in court yesterday how several years ago his family had tried to take him to Roseburg, and when he had revolted they had him sent to the reform school "to learn a trade."

"But I didn't learn anything," he said bitterly. "The judge told me that they would let me out in six months, but they didn't."

Printing Time

LACING YOUR PRINTING ORDERS IN the hands of a competent printer at the dull time is a matter of foresight for the business man. Now the rush is over, the printer has more time for your work—each and every detail of the job gets the proper attention, and the satisfaction shared is mutual. But there is no satisfaction to share if your printer is a printer in name only. He must "be there with the goods" and also deliver said goods.

This company has enjoyed a season of unprecedented prosperity through being able to turn out creditable printing.

Equipment, up-to-date composition and automatic press-feeding without the old-fashioned finger marks, is the combination that makes printing.

Look over your needs; stock up during the "dog days." A phone call will bring a representative.
