Tomorrow and Sunday Another Special "FICKLE WOMEN" With David Butler Weekly—Comedy GRAND Where The Big Shows Play

ART WILSON EDITS BOOK

Large Volume Published for Steamship Company Is Real Thriller WHOLE WORLD COVERED Drama That Might Be Written Around Big Business Cleverly Shown

A. R. Wilson, formerly manager of the Postal Telegraph company in Salem, is the author of one of the biggest books of the year. It is a genuine thriller; every page crammed with some of the most exciting adventures in the whole business world.

Nothing Dry Here It is often said that figures and statistics and directories are dry reading. But how could one read of sandalwood, and copra, and tropical feathers and whalebone, and deer horns, and walrus tusks, and Ming pottery, and jade carvings 500 or 5000 years old, and obelisks, and Indian teak, and shark skins, and jewels fresh from the mines, without feeling a thrill? For every one of these things, at one time or another, man has risked their lives in trade.

Feathers Bring Big Money. Ostrich feathers look like trifling business assets; yet one of the South African towns written of in the book, sells $5,000,000 worth of these plumes a year. The copra advertised by a score or a hundred Far Eastern firms, is making a deadly fight against the dairy cow of the whole Occident—and the Portland Copra factories are all but cutting the throats of every cow in Oregon.

RECLAMATION AREAS HAVE ALLURING NAMES

Some of the names of various animals, insects and birds. Some like that of "Fat Elk" have doubtless been selected to attract favorable attention, while others have been selected in honor of some town or other point of local prominence.

Among other suggestive names recalled by Mr. Cupper are "Mountain Sheep," "Eagle Point," "Bear Creek," "Squaw Creek," "Goose Lake," "Beaver Slough," and "Dear Island."

GENERAL BYARS HAS CELEBRATION Active Oregon Citizen is 82 Years Old, But Feels Much Younger

Eighty-two years old yesterday, but spry as a cricket, and his bride still with him after they had crossed the Great Plains train from Iowa in 1852, 68 years ago, General W. H. Byars of Salem celebrated a kind of birthday anniversary that comes to few men.
