STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Cal. Aug. 12-Stanford is to try this fall to build up a football team which will dedicate the new $200,-100 stadium here with a victory over the University of California in the "big game" November 19. Both Gene Van Ghent, the new coach and Jack Patrick, the varsity captain, are confident the Cardinal has an excellent chance or victory. Football plans are being made early, for Stanford authorities realize that it will take a firstclass team to defeat the "wonier" eleven which it is reported will again wear the blue and gold his season. Last year Stanford lost to California and finished second in the Pacific Coast Conference title race. Many of the 1920 players will be on the squad this year, although "Dink" Templeton, star punter, "Swede" Righter, Bob Peouze and Fred Adams, stars of a ear ago, will be missed.

To do the kicking, Templeton, now assistant coach, hopes to develop Morris Kirksey, Stanford's star sprint runner. Captain Jack Patrick and Art Wilcox, end. Kirksey has not yet made a Cardinal varsity eleven but it is believed he will be in a backfield position this year. In the center position, filled last year by Righter, Stanford has Luedke, a 200-pound veteran of the freshman team of a year ago. Will, Fawcett, former all-southern California end, shauld fill Adams' shoes well at right and Doughty, a transfer student from the University of Texas and "Scotchy" bedside chimed its warning notes, With a start I seized it, muffled it in the bedclothing, for fear its noise would waken Junior, sleeping peacefully in h s crib, or even trate to the other bedrooms.

WHAT MADGE FACED IN KA-TIE'S KITCHEN.

For a moment-so suddenly had I awakened-I did not remember why I had set the clock so early when it was Saturday and I did not have to go to school. Then with a little thriti of excitement I remembered. Tomorrow would be my baby's first birthday, and I had resolved to bake his birthday cake myself,

I had had little heart for birthday preparations, because D cky had remained obstinately silent, and I had no means of knowing whether or not he meant to swallow the ultimatum he had given men when he had left for the city weeks before. Because of this I had not discussed the matter with Mother Graham at all. and, curlously enough, she had said nothing to me on the subfect. But I had made a hurried trip to the city on the Saturday previous, had purchased some gifts for my small son, and had also provided the daintiest single candle and holder that I could find in the shops for the decoration of his first cake, Some odd and attractive favors had met my eyes and had drawn more money from my purse than I had expected to spend. For the idea that Dicky would surely return for Junior's first hirthday was obsessing me, and in the back of my brain I cherished a plan.

Madge Plans Cheerfully. 🐌

If he returned home in time i the f rst birthday cake Lillian and clation here today. her little daughter, Marion, the Durkees, and—I included the Farfax sisters with a wry face the pinnacle of mental peace Dr. Banzhaf said. where I could contemplate with perfect equanamity the inclusion can only be accomplished when a of Edith Fairfax in so intimate a group of dentists, each a specialtamily c'rcle.

Durkee had reached the stage his chosen field only, thus inwhere he would not enjoy any creasing the efficiency 40 per cent, occasion-let alone one so prosaic because he does only the work ha as a baby's birthday celebration is best qualified to do." -without having Lella Fairfax among those present, and that, kee industrial dental clinic was on the other hand, any place proving a success. This does work where he could see and talk to fori ndustrial establishments with her was pleasant enough without which it has agreements. roviding any other attraction. My spirits were at a low ebb however, as I rose and dressed w th in inite care not to make any Chaulmoogra Tree To noise. Was it possible that Dicky meant to carry out his determination not to return home, and that he would let our I tie son's first birthday go by without a sign? If he did not let me know his plans n the next few hours it would be too late for me to invite the quests I had decided on.

A Complication. I am afraid if I had consulted Maryland. my own selfish inclinations 1 would have voted for just three persons at the birthday celebra-tion, Junior, Dicky and I. But CHICHESTER S PILLS tion, Junior, Dicky and I. But i knew that Dicky's mother, my ather, Katie and Jim must share in the day's joy, and if they were in the day's joy, and objection to—in bad no objection to—in true friends as L'llian and the Durkees.

Obviously, however, I could uc. invite these triends, dear as they were, without Dicky. I gave a little subdued exciamation of anger at my husband's obstinacy. There was but one thing to be done, however, I would go ahead, except or notifying Lillian and the Durkees, upon the assumption that Dicky was coming home. Then at the last minute I could telephone them if he relented and surprised us.

I completed my toilet and opened my bureau, taking from it a large gingham working aprou which completely covered my The lttle alarm clock at my gown. Then, still reducing all noise of my movements to a minimum, I opened the door and stole down the steps to the kitchen.

It was in the exquisite order in which Katie always keeps t. that its shrill notes might pene- and I forgot, or rather resolutely pushed to the back of my mind my unhappiness concerning D .y. as I moved around it, opening a window here, preparing a cooking table there, getting together all the ingredients and utensils for the concocting of the momentous cake.

It had been months s'nce I had made a cake of any kind, and in order to be sure that I had forgotten nothing I went into the I'brary for my own especial cook book which I remembered putting carefully away upon a certain shelf. But it was not where I had left

t. With an exclamation of dismay at the de'ay, for I had planned to be out of the kitchen before Katie came down, I turned to the other shelves.

It was several minutes before I found the book, and when I returned to the kitchen it was to f nd my mother-in-law, a torn dable figure in her cooking regalia, standing beside my table, cold questioning in her gaze, while from the doorway Katle glared at her.
