I did not reprove the girl as otherwise would have done, for I had realized from her dramatic outburst that the matter of making the cake for my little lad's natel day lay deeper than hurt pride over the slighting of her rulinary achievements, that was entwined with the thought of her own baby which had died at its birth months before Junior opened his eyes upon the world. Instead. I held her firmly yet gently in my arms until she had ceased to sob, and had begun to earch wildly for her handkerhief, the inev table ludicrous anti-climax of Katle's teary tempests. Then I said softly:

"How would you and Jim like to borrow Junior tomorrow afternoon for a little celebration all your own? You can bake your cake sometime today and trim it anyway you like, and I will buy nything you wish for your little celebration "

Kat'e's eyes were like stars as she put her hands impetuously on either side of my face, and demand eargerly: "Vot you mean, dot for leetle vile Jeem and me have dot trabee for joost us, all same as if he
