Polk County Again Will Exhibit at State Fair DALLAS, Ore., Aug. 26.—(Special to The Statesman.) A representative of the state fair board, was in Dallas conferring with the county court relative to Polk county exhibiting at the state fair this year. Mr. Taylor also made calls on various representatives of business men and assured that this county would have an exhibit of exceptional merit this fall.

Polk county has not been represented at the state fair for the past three years, having won the first prize so many times that the county court and the people in general thought it best to "lay off" for a while and let some other county have a chance.

James E. French, who has had charge of collecting exhibits in the days when Polk county captured the blue ribbon is again collecting the exhibits this year and it is safe to say that the exhibit will be well up towards the top.

It is an opportune time for the bumper apple crop which Oregon and Washington have this year.

Meetings in Tent Are Attracting Attention The tent meetings on the Willamette university campus, just east of Kimball college have been attracting considerable attention. Rev. C. H. Coules, the evangelist in charge, is a singer and chorus director with many years of pulp experience, and his singing has been an attractive feature. He is asking for a large choir of volunteer singers from any or no church to make the musical part of the meetings more effective. Rev. C. C. Crowston, of Troutdale, is to preach every evening, while the afternoon Bible study from the book of Romans is to be conducted by Rev. Mr. Coules.

In listing the donors of the tent which the evangelists are carrying with them, the Statesman omitted the name of Canby, which first started the tent fund. The expensive tent has been donated for the evangelistic cause, by some of the Oregon towns where meetings have already been held. Rev. Mr. Coules announces the co-operation of several of the Salem churches in the series of
