THE ANSWER MOTHER GRA-HAM DEMANDED OF MADGE

My scheme for breakfast worked out beautifully. Long before Mother Graham had taken her cake from the oven the aroma of differ about it?" Katie's co fee was delicately scenting the air, and my motherin-law had followed it to the dining room. "What in the world?" she demanded, for once too surprised to pe dignified: I looked up from the comfortable chaise lounge in the bay window of the dining room, where was ensconced with the morning paper. I had no particular dut'es until Junior wakened, and I did not care to leave Katie to my mother-in-law's tender mercies, especially when the elder woman was engaged in anything so nerveracking as the concoction of Richard Second's first hirthday cake So I took advantage of the interval to read the paper comfortably and leisurely instead of simply skimming it on the train as I usually am compelled to do. "I thought you'd be hungry so I had Katin prepare breakfast on the electr's things in here." I an- that it was "rising beautifully." swered diplomatically. "You said you didn't want to be disturbed

A Surprise for Mother Graham. "Humph!" When my mothern-law cannot find fault she is lost, and this prospect of breakfast a good half-hour sooner than she could reasonably have expected it appeared completely to nonplus her. She drew the chair from her place at the table, which was already set, and onserved with an air of nonchalance painfully assumed: "Well! I have a little time now, as I have just put my cake in the oven, so I might as well have my coffee I suppose. I had intended to tell Katie to make some of those little hot biscults this morning, but, of course, that is 'mpossible now." Her tone was plainly intended to mirror disappointment, and the belief that in some way the b'scuits could have been managed. It something hot." "Don't you think we've gone over that enough?" I asked placidly. "I like my fru't first, You like your coffee. And we both have medical author:ties for our course. So don't you think it would be a good idea to agree to "I think you are adopting a very impertment tone toward me," she retorted acridly, and for the next few minutes devoted herself strictly to her cereal and the delicious emelet which Kate brought in next. "Has that ape got over her contribution to the conversation, cenvered explosively as the girl left the room a ter serving the

"Well, see that she keeps out of the kitchen and my way until I get that cake out of the oven!" my mother-uslaw retorted. As if her words had reminded her of a duty, she sprang up. rushed to the kitchen, and evidently inspected the cake, for she returned in a moment flushed and tr'umphant, and announced sheep as for a lamb," I quoted to myself remembering that I had insisted to Mother Graham that there was no quarrel between D'cky and me. "Of course he is!" I asserted.

But he is so busy that I don't expect he w'll get here much before tonight " "Humph!" she ejaculated again, and the monosyllable, which was the only reply she vouchsafed me, held no more of doubt than did my own heart, (To be continued)
