my promise to myself as I arranged my roses in vases and bowls in every place I could put a receptacle for them. "Upstairs, downstairs and in my lady's chamber," I hummed as I arranged an especially exquisite cluster in a slender vase on the guest room dressing table, with a loving thought for the lady who. I hoped, would occupy the room that night. "May I ask the reason for all this festivity?" Mother Graham's icily courteous voice sounded from the doorway. Either Katie had not seen her or more probably my mother-inlaw had given the girl some unexpected little task which had prevented her from announcing the elder woman's arrival to me as I had asked her to do. My first impulse was to evade her question, let her think I had Salem, Oregon s'mply been overstocked with roses, and had been compelled to put them in all the rooms. But a second, wiser thought made me
