dependent upon their pullets as breeders. It is not considered good practice to breed from pullets. Some argue that they are not fully matured and have not the necessary vitality.

How is that to be done? In the study of the records mentioned the O. A. C. experiment station has found that the age of maturity and the differences in the various maturing ages are closely connected with the yearly production.

By marking the pullets as they start to lay, a very close estimate can be made upon which will be the best individuals in the flock.
