the home of Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Davies, 941 North Cottage street. Mr. Alspaugh left yesterday for Seattle from where he will shortly leave for home. On his trip west Mr. Alspaugh stopped at many places of interest.

Mr. and Mrs. Lee Canfield and Mr. and Mrs. P. E. Fullerton returned Sunday evening from a motor trip to Pendleton where they attended the Round-Up. They report a delightful trip.

O. E. Crossman of Snohomish, Wash., is expected to arrive today for a week's visit at the home of his sister, Mrs. S. McEinea.

Mrs. S. J. Mayhood, a cousin of Dr. C. H. Robertson, was a week-end guest at the Robertson home. Mr. Mayhood, who is connected with the work of the interstate commerce commission, has recently been stationed at New York where they will make their home.

Lyle Bartholomew left Saturday for Eugene to again take up his work at the University of Oregon. This is Mr. Bartholomew's senior year and his popularity is evinced by the fact that he is president of the student body.

Mrs. J. W. Moore, formerly of Woodburn, now making her home at 1033 Oak street, entertained Thursday afternoon the Woodburn chapter of the P. E. O., of which she is a member. Members of the Salem chapter invited were Mrs. B. J. Miles, Miss Laura Grant and Mrs. Gerald Volk.

Charles Robertson, son of Dr. and Mrs. C. H. Robertson, will leave the latter part of the week for Portland where he will enter the Oregon medical school. Mr. Robertson has completed three years of work at the University of Oregon, of which the Oregon medical school is a branch.

Governor and Mrs. Olcott and son Chester, with R. B. Goodin and Richard Goodin, returned on Sunday from the Round-Up at Pendleton. The trip was made by motor. While in Pendleton they were guests of Dr. and Mrs. Wilson D. McNary.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Wilson, Mrs. A. M. Wilson and Mrs. Alec Powers of Lebanon are guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. S. McEinea, at the Court apartments. Mr. Wilson is proprietor of the Lebanon hotel.

MY HEART AND MY HUSBAND

Adele Garrison's New Phase of REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

CHAPTER 179
MADGE'S VICTORY AND DICKY'S SURPRISE

I did not waste any farther time over the telephone with little Mrs. Durkee. With a curt "Yes, it is ready," I snapped up the telephone. I purposely made my voice sound offended. I wanted her to have that worry over in the minute or two which must elapse before I could see her.

I fairly ran downstairs, and skimmed over the lawn lying between the two houses with a certainty I had not suspected I possessed. The side door of the house was open except for the screen door which I could see was unlocked. I rang three short, sharp rings, always my signal to Mrs. Durkee, then, as was my custom, opened the door without further ado and made my way up the stairs to her voice.

I heard her voice in a primitive murmur before I reached the door.

"No, Alfred, dear, don't ask me," she was saying. "Go on with Lella. Don't let me spoil your enjoyment. I shall be perfectly all right." Alfred was expostulating worriedly as I knocked lightly upon the lintel of the half-opened door, and without further ado pushed it further open and crossed to my little friend's side.

"I'll see to your mother," I said crisply. "Please go over with Lella at once. Katie is having seven distinct kinds of spasms about her dinner. Get everybody together just outside of the dining room. Dicky is planning a big surprise of some kind upon us all at once. I'll be there almost immediately. Please hurry!"

Madge Takes Charge.

I flung the last words impatiently over my shoulder as I bent over my little friend, who was lying back in a rocking chair with every appearance of suffering. I think Alfred, who knows his mother's little foibles very well, although he never betrays his knowledge, was only too glad to leave her to me. I cast a furtive glance after him, saw him seize Lella—who, troubled and reluctant, was standing just outside the door—by the arm and hurry her down the hall. I waited only until I was sure they were out of earshot before beginning my camaign against my little neighbor. "See here, you little fraud!" I said with surface merriment, but with underlying grimness that I knew she would recognize. "If you think I'm going to let you spoil my whole party, as Dicky says. Here! I brought this along with me—it is absolutely warranted to relieve a headache, and if it doesn't, why there are plenty of couches at our house. But be there at the beginning of this dinner bathe your face and eyes—that's what I always do when my head aches—and come along."

The Surprise Disclosed.

"This," which I held out to her, was a kind of pellet prescribed for me long ago by Dr. Pettit when I was suffering from nervous headaches. I knew that if she were really suffering it would relieve her, and if she were shamming, as I more than half suspected, it would not hurt her.

"Will it cure a heartache, too, Madge?" she asked with a pathetic querulousness that appealed to me even while it irritated me.

"I'm sure of it," I said flippantly. "Because heartaches are usually nothing but indigestion. Come, where's a wash cloth or do you prefer some powder?"

"But I look a fright," she protested weakly, and I knew that my battle was won.

"You're just awful, Madge," she replied, daintily applying the powder puff. "But I suppose I ought not to spoil your dinner. But I never thought of it in that way, and it just seemed as if I couldn't—"

"Never mind that now," I said, bringing her a glass of water, and standing over her relentlessly until she had swallowed the pellet I had prescribed. "Now, tuck your arm in mine so fashion, and come along."

We found everybody gathered in the living room outside the closed dining room, and there was a general shout of relief when we appeared. Only Lella Fairfax's face remained vaguely shadowed. "Now, let the show begin!" Lillian chanted.

Dicky, holding Junior perched upon his shoulder, put his hand upon the knob of the door. "Now you'll see a birthday present!" he boasted. "None of your rattles and bells and silver dishes in mine."

He threw open the door, and we trooped in to see in the midst of a pile of other toys an immense rocking horse, almost as tall as Dicky himself—a magnificent, costly toy, suitable for a child of five!

SEPTIMUS PALIN IS MAIN WINNER

Rowe System of Scoring is Discarded After Three Heats at Columbus

COLUMBUS, Sept. 26.—Septimus Palin, Indianapolis driver, was the principal winner in today's grand circuit program of five class events, two of which were started Saturday. The Rowe system of scoring was used for three heats and then discarded.

Palin won with Wonda May and Roger C. and was third with Kokomo George, all pacers. Wanda May was back in Saturday's part of the 2:15 pace but she had command in both heats today. Kokomo George stood a good chance to win the 2:04 pace until Senator Wilkes got by him on the stretch in the fourth heat. Peter Daw handily won the final heat of the 2:13 trot, begun Saturday, and thus became a double victor during the meeting. Charley Rex of the same stable was in the 2:05 trot that Peter Coley captured after Natan-
