CHAPTER 183 WHAT MADGE AND LILLIAN

SET OUT TO DO. As the seconds were on into minutes and there was no sound from the hall into which Mrs. Durkee and my mother-in-law had disappeared, my anxiety increased. Despite my knowledge of Mother Graham's innate sense of justice was not so confident as was Dicky that she had followed Mrs. tle woman to her senses, Might she not instead-my

I signalled my apprehension to Lillian, woman fashion, with a lifting of the eyebrows. She promptly seized my cue. "Alf." she said with the authority of long friendship, turning to him, "why don't you take Lella into the library for a few minutes and tell her the things that we all know you're dying to utter? Then by the time your mother comes back we'll be ready for the happy
