But the car, instead of proceeding along the road in a lady-like man- the money I had into it." ner as it had done under Dicky's guidance, shot forward like a piece of shrapnel, and making almost a complete half-turn, climb ed the bank at the side of the road and started into an open field. I felt Dicky's foot shoving mine from the lever against which I was pushing saw his hands tugging at the wheel, held my breath at the danger of the car's turning over, which even my inexperienced eyes saw. Dicky did not speak until he had the car back in the road. Then he dashed has hand across his forehead, which I saw was wet with perspirat on, and broke loose: "For the love of Mike what did you think you were doing? This car isn't trained for any acrobatic stunts like that. What did you do anyway?"

I gulped back my fright, for I wished to salvage a bit of poise from the wreck of Dicky's op nion of my abilities. "If I knew what I did I probably wouldn't have done it," I said demurely.
