health by

O. L. Scot

Mental impulses are the life impulses that travel the spinal nerve line between headquarters (the brain) and all its branches (the organs and cells of the body). These impulses, unless interfered with, perform their work with unerring exactness. They need no attention from us. In fact they carry on their work whether we are awake or asleep, conscious or unconscious. But like telephone lines, these nerve lines must be free and in order. When joints of the spine are slightly out of line, they press on spinal nerves. This interference causes weakness and disease, which cause of disease the chiropractor removes by his chiropractic spinal adjust-
