EDITORIALS OF THE PEOPLE

For Rathie and Owens.

Editor Statesman:

We would like to know what John Rathie and Owens are going to be hanged for. There is only one crime that a man can be hanged for and that is first degree murder. These boys have murdered no one. True, they might have premeditated or planned to escape prison but they have never killed anyone and what is puzzling to a large number of people in the state as well as in Salem is why they are thinking of hanging two innocent boys.

And we are hoping and praying that Governor Olcott will yet commute their sentence to life imprisonment.

SEATTLE IS HIT BY HEAVY FROST

Salem Creameryman Tells of Conditions As He Found Them

"I never saw as heavy a frost back in the polar belt east of the Rockies," said W. C. Gregory, speaking of the beginning of the bad weather at Seattle, when he visited the Sound metropolis last week.

"We drove up to attend the interstate convention of ice cream manufacturers, Tuesday and Wednesday were good days, but on Thursday morning Seattle had the heaviest, whitest frost that I ever dreamed of. It was almost like a snow storm. Over at Tacoma, 35 miles away, it was a slush all over the streets. We drove home in the one day, however, by starting in good time. The 255 miles isn't too bad for a good Ford. But it was frightfully cold; all the blankets we had were not enough—a full set of Arctic furs, and a heater to boot, would have been none too much.

"The delegates from all over the northwest reported a general resumption of normal business conditions. The scare is passing, and everywhere there is a chance for sober, hopeful optimism to operate. It did look a bit discouraging, however, to see 47 government shipping board ships tied out in the harbor, rotting just as fast as they can, because their is either no market for them, no crews to sail them, or no business for them to do. Perhaps it's a good thing to take them to a place like Seattle, where the salt fog gives them a fine chance to rust and rot quickly and end the misery.

"But they were a good investment, at that. Every ship helped to win the war, by showing how tremendously the country was in earnest. If they give 'em away, or sink 'em, or let 'em go down at their anchorage, they have paid their way and are ready to be wiped off the state. Seattle has been desperately hard hit by the slump in shipbuilding and shipping, and has lost many thousands of her war-time population. Its citizens look on these idle ships with a more mournful eye, perhaps, than the mere landsman to whom a ship is not much more than a plow or a house—to be used or discarded as the season goes. It's the life of the shipping city, and Seattle can't get used to these dead ones.

"But still, they're coming back in a business way; indeed, they're cheerful, which is a vast revolution after what they've had in the last year or two."

Captain Carl Bissett Is Under Examination

VANCOUVER, B. C., Nov. 24.—Captain Carl Bissett of the steamship Canadian Importer, testifying here today before a board of inquiry, explained in answer to criticisms, why he sent out the open boat in which 11 men recently drifted for two weeks on the Pacific Ocean, while the ship, her engine room flooded and wireless disabled, was water-logged and helpless off the Oregon coast.

Captain Bissett said the risk incurred by the castaways was not greater than that of those who remained aboard the Canadian Importer. He pointed out that the ship had a list of 30 degrees and "was not a safe place for anyone."

A drain pipe from the ship's bathroom, in which a 14-inch crack developed, was exhibited to the board. When the vessel was dry-docked, this broken pipe was the only damage discovered. The inquiry will be continued tomorrow.

Drainage District Plan Is Revived With Flood

The recent flood has again emphasized the need of drainage in the large area of country lying southwest of Salem, including some of the land owned by the state and much owned by the city of Salem. A law was passed at the legislative session of 1919 allowing the organization of drainage districts for land so owned and the organization of a district was for some time in contemplation, but the plan lapsed. Since the recent flood there have been signs of its reviving, and Percy A. Cupper, after another survey of the situation following the flood, has furnished additional data to the committee which has had the proposal in hand.
