SILVER KING IS DEVELOPING Mining Company Elects Officers—Brown of Salem Added to Staff

Metal mining begins to look good once more in the west, at least good enough to encourage the Silver King company to start a development campaign on its property on the little north fork of the Santiam, 45 miles southeast of Salem. The company held its annual election at Albany on Monday, electing most of its old officers, but adding the name of Harry E. Brown of Salem to the directorate. There are between 100 and 200 stockholders of record, but most of the ownership is in Portland and Albany.

The property consists of 12 claims, approximately 204 acres. There is a waterfall on the property, where Henline creek gives a 150-foot direct head, and more that can be developed by a pipeline, to make a maximum 300 feet. There is a horse power plant 80 per cent equipped with air compressor, for a drill outfit to go in 800 feet from the lowest point on the property and strike the main vein within about 800 feet. Two or more other veins, of size and value not determined, were cut before reaching this main vein. There will be a depth of 950 feet on the incline vein when the main ore body is out. The top prospecting and the 70-foot shaft sunk from the top, show good ore values of silver, lead, zinc and some gold. Single assays have run as high as $149 a ton, according to the company reports.

The company had several tons of picked ore taken out from the various workings that washed away down the valley by the roaring mountain flood a month ago. It is too badly scattered to hunt—and some of it may be in the Columbia river before now.

The company seeks to raise about $5000 for immediate development work, which the engineers say should carry the tunnel in to the main ore body. The oil flotation process is believed to be the ultimate ore treatment for the property, if the ore holds to the same quality at depth as it does where already prospected. The property is in Marion county.

State Prison Automobile Involved in Street Clash—Frank Turnbull, a penitentiary trustee and driver of automobiles used by the prison, was involved in a bad crash at State and North Cottage streets yesterday afternoon when his car was struck by a machine driven by C. W. Wilks of Macley, according to reports filed at the police station.

Turnbull, driving the big state-owned Hudson car, is said to have been driving at a rate of over 30 miles an hour, while proceeding west on State street. Wilks, with a woman and a child as passengers, was driving east on State street and had attempted to make the turn to North Cottage street when he encountered the Hudson car.

Both rear wheels of the state-owned machine were badly smashed, a front wheel and tire were damaged and the machine spun around on the parking to a complete "right about" toward the east. Wilk's machine sustained damaged front gear and a smashed rear wheel, it was reported.

It is reported that the ex-kaiser is to be wed again, the kaiser in having passed away but a few months ago. He has been reading about two being able to live as cheaply as one.
