Adele Garrison's New Phase of REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

MY HEART AND MY HUSBAND Chapter 265 HAS MRS. TICER A SPECIAL

REASON FOR HER REQUEST? "Good mernin', folks!"

Mrs. Ticor's mellow voice brought the cheeriness of ripe apples into our little camp as she strode up the path from the beach, a pail dangling from her strong, brown hands, shapely in spite of the work they had done.

"Thought you might like a mess of soft clams," she went on, taking some seaweed from the top of her pail and displaying the clams with their ugly black necks thrusting themselves out from their shells. She was as incongruously dressed as ever. Tightly laced as any mid-Victorian dame at a ball, with a fresh bungalow apron, an armless, tight-fitting, woollen sweater, and a pair of men's brogans on her feet, she was an oddly attractive picture with her shapely plump arms bared to above the elbow and bronzed with the suns of nearly forty years.

"Well, you thought correctly that time if you never did before!" Lillian laughed, coming forward and taking the pail of clams from Mrs. Ticer beamed at the jocular, friendly words. Lillian always knows exactly what note to strike with people. With those who might misunderstand and take advantage of her friendliness she has a reserve, a hauteur of manner, that any grande dame might envy. But with a sturdy daughter of the soil like Mrs. Ticer, who has breeding which fills her lack of training and advantages, my friend adopts a freedom of manner, an absolute equality of tone set last year, 2 acres logans. Price bounded one to almost three which is my hopeless envy for if should only succeed in being

A Remarkable Woman.

"These are wonderful, Mrs. Ticer," she went on, inspecting the clams judiciously. "We expect Mr. Graham on the afternoon train today, and we'll welcome him with a mess of these steamed.

"He's very fond of them," I said heartily, "and I thank you so much for bringing them. Mrs Ticer. It is awfully kind of you. Neither of us made the mistake of offering to pay the sturdy fisherwoman for the clams. Of course I won't come back, I never did like playin' gooseberry when I was a girl, an' I'm too old to begin now, But I thought it wouldn't hurt nothin' for me to ride over with you.
