AUTO MECHANICS EXTENSION COURSE

State Board of Vocational Education Offers Salem Good Opportunity

The state board for vocational education is offering to Salem mechanics a trade extension course in the study of auto mechanics and gas engine repairing. This extension work is arranged on the group system, each group to consist of from eight to 12 men as may be arranged by the instructor. The instruction to be given will cover 12 lessons on the study of automobile mechanism and will include the theory of gas engines as well as the repair of autos and tractors.

Mr. A. R. Nichols, supervisor of trades, of the state board for vocational education has arranged with Mr. Thos. S. Watts of the Liberty garage on Ferry street to take charge of the formation and instruction of the classes. Mr. Watts has special training as an electrical worker and auto mechanic and has had, in addition, special preparation which will enable him to handle such classes successfully.

The cost to each person enrolling will be very moderate, as one-half of the compensation of the instructor is paid out of federal funds, at the disposal of the state board. Persons interested in securing special instruction along this line are requested to call on Mr. Watts at the Liberty garage or confer with E. E. Elliott, director, at room 102 at the state house. A meeting will be held at this garage on Friday evening, this week to arrange the details of this course.

The Minnesota reservation that he was "the oldest living person in the world."

Any Name Good Enough— Ga-be-nah-gewn-wonce was also known as Wah-ha-gunta, and would even answer to plain John Smith. According to the bureau of Indian affairs, he was first-maker of the once powerful Black-Foot tribe. His declining days were spent on the north bank of Mud lake, 12 miles from the village of Ball Club, Minnesota, where he lived in a hut of birch bark. He outlived several wives, and when long past the century mark he was still young enough to woo another.

His once powerful frame slowly wasted, his hair turned pure white, and his face became leamed like, and his face but his step was still sprightly and he never hummed some tune. His unusual fondness for music was one of his peculiarities. Often he walked the 12 miles to Ball Club to hear a piano or violin, his favorite musical instruments. When a rag-time air was struck up the old Indian would smile broadly, his black beady eyes would sparkle, and he would lift his shoulders and snap his fingers in real cabaret style.

Memory Useful to Historians— Historians made use of the Indian's remarkable memory to corroborate stories of the Indian fights, some of them back as far as 1800. Smith was often able to give the year, month, and sometimes the day of Indian happenings that had been lost track of.

One event in his early life which the aged Indian related in detail and which he declared is imprinted even more firmly in his memory than important happenings of the last few years, is a massacre by the Sioux Indians in Minnesota near the present sites of the Twin Cities. The massacre resulted from an effort by a missionary, known to the Indians as Pah-de-gree, to effect a conciliation between the Sioux and Chippewas. Many hundreds of the latter were slain. Smith says he was but 10 years old at that time.

No Use for Chairs— The "falling of the stars," the shower of meteors that occurred in 1833, he recalled minutely. He was about 40 years old at that time.

In a recent interview Smith said, through an interpreter, that 40 years ago he could speak English quite fluently, but that in recent years since his mind became less active, the language almost deserting him.

Indian customs, closely followed, he considered the big factor in extending life so long. His oldest acquaintances never recall having seen him sit in a chair or lie in a bed. He was just as much opposed to many other customs of the whites, for he contended that they were contrary to the laws of nature.
