POULTRY KEEPERS DESERVE PROFITS

They Should Have Good Prices for Stock When They Produce It

The following are some current and seasonable observations of Henry W. Kruckenberg of Los Angeles, one of the leading writers of the country on poultry subjects:

We sometimes wonder if the average poultry breeder really possesses an intelligent knowledge of his costs? For after all, the operations on an average poultry plant are so varied and miscellaneous that the question of accurate costs is often more or less speculative in character. The detail of labor is not always accounted for—the poultry breeder failing to figure a reasonable wage for himself and other members of his family who may contribute to the management of his fowls. Interest on investment, wear and tear on buildings and improvements, insurance and taxes, shrinkage and losses, are all factors that should be considered in computing the costs of his live stock and their products. And unless this is allowed for he is apt to sell his market poultry and breeding stock for too low a price rather than at commensurate profits. The cost of feeding pullets under a system that will really cover outlay will often be as great as the return some breeders get for their birds. If the stock comes from a good laying strain it should command a premium above the ordinary ruling prices. The same applies to hatching eggs and day-old chicks and also to commercial hen fruit. To be sure, the latter is often subject to onerous conditions when the grower does not command what he might be entitled to; but in the case of breeding and laying females, we are quite of the opinion that the average price is too low rather than too high. The poultry farmer, like the city merchant and banker, is worthy of his price.

Prices are more or less an elastic subject governed by local conditions and environment. Quality and service are not cheap factors in any business, and least of all in poultry farming. Good stock should (and usually does) command profitable prices.

When it comes to foundation and breeding stock and exhibition birds, the matter of price assumes a still greater importance. Since the flock is not composed of good specimens for reproductive and exhibition birds, those that do "measure up" should command a price in keeping with their quality. Good breeding specimens of recognized strains are worth money. Hens of quality should never be sold for less than $3 each and up; cocks at $5 and up. These are minimum prices. As a matter of fact, females from the yards of prominent breeders and exhibitors bring much higher figures. It is becoming quite common for birds of both sexes, with a high productive ancestry, to command as much money as exhibition birds at leading poultry shows. And it is right that they should, for stock of this kind is usually the result of years of breeding, and besides possesses a value peculiarly its own.

Since the season for the sale of day-old chicks and the growing of stock to maintain flocks is now about in full swing, it is opportune to caution buyers to insist on good birds from recognized blood lines with record performance behind them; such birds are in no sense "cheap," are an economic investment at prices that may appear "high" as compared to others offered for less money. It is also a period for breeders to consider their costs in the production of chicks and young stock, and to command a corresponding price for their product. It is about time that poultry farmers (at least some of them) ceased to operate for just a mere existence—and often at a loss. Yea, verily!

WILL HAVE A NEW PLANT AT NEWBERG

The Oregon Growers Preparing for Larger Business in Yamhill City

Following is a news bulletin of the Oregon Growers Cooperative association, issued from the Salem office of the association on Tuesday, the 21st:

The Oregon Growers Cooperative association has purchased the lot and buildings in Newberg owned by the White Sox Orchard company, and formerly used as a sash and door factory. The lot is 200 by 150 feet fronting on Main street, which is paved. There are three buildings on the lot, two of which are constructed of concrete blocks. The main building is 40 by 60 feet two stories high and equipped with an electric elevator. An office building is located adjacent to the main building. There is also a large shed of wooden construction located on the lot which is suitable for apple packing. The main build-

ROMA ACCIDENT CHANGES PLANS

Non-Explosive Helium Hereafter to Be Used in Nation's Gas Ships

EXPERIMENT GOES ON Disaster Not to Stop Inventive Development, Says Statement

NEW YORK, Feb. 22.—In the future, helium, a non-explosive gas, no doubt will be used for airships instead of dangerous hydrogen, said a statement issued tonight by the Aeronautics Chamber of Commerce of America. It added that the Roma disaster "should be regarded the same as an accident in a laboratory."

The chamber asserted that development of the airplane must be pressed, despite the disaster.

Purchase Deferred

"The loss of the Roma should not be regarded as a reflection on the operating personnel or the judgment of the war department in having purchased it from Italy," said the statement. "It was the obvious thing to do, because we have not developed lighter than air craft in this country to the extent that other governments have developed it with public funds."

Caution is Rule

"We do not abandon our laboratories, mines, railroads or steamships when accident befalls them. The accident to the Roma may indicate our future course of procedure."

Controls Suspected

NORFOLK, Va., Feb. 22.—A statement by Major General Mason M. Patrick, head of the army air service that he believed the destruction of the airship Roma was due to an accident to the controls regulating the altitude of the craft, stood out tonight as the only official statement from any of those investigating the accident which yesterday caused the death of 34 persons, the injury of eight others and the demolition of the world's largest semi-rigid airship.

Testimony is Basis

General Patrick expressed his opinion on the basis of testimony he had heard thus far and substantiated statements previously made unofficially by survivors, that the elevating rudder, a contrivance resembling the wings of an airplane and attached to the tail of the Roma, buckled and fell forward, forcing the craft in a nose dive which ended when she crashed into a high power electric transmission line, caught fire and burned with the great number of her crew and passengers pinned beneath.

Rudder Gives Way

Army officers also emphasized that the rudder had given way and that the fire did not occur until the ship struck the electric wires.

Morgue Houses Dead

A small morgue in Newport News housed the dead, 39 of whom had been identified tonight. None were allowed to see them except for identification, but wives, mothers and sweethearts gathered about and a crowd was in evidence all day. The bodies were badly burned and identification in many cases was made by watches or articles of jewelry recovered with them.

Kuser Introduced

Bill Macy, undertaker, and member of the McMinnville club, in a short address told numerous anecdotes on Salem and McMinnville members. William L. Kuser, a recent arrival in Salem, expressed his gratification at being able to claim Oregon for his home, having come from Iowa. He is a new training school superintendent. Tom Benson, secretary of the McMinnville club, expressed his pleasure at meeting so many Rotarians and recited a poem to prove it.

Association Valuable

"You do not join Rotary as you would other organizations by paying dues and becoming a member," Mr. Bayles declared. "But a man becomes a Rotarian, first through his occupation or classification, and then by his selection by the club." Hence to become a Rotarian, it is an honor to be appreciated.

Commons Puzzled

LONDON, Feb. 22.—In the lobbies of the house of commons tonight the adjournment of the Ard Fheis at Dublin was regarded as puzzling and caused anxiety. It completely upsets the time table of Irish events outlined recently by Winston Spencer Churchill, secretary for the colonies, when he laid stress on the importance of an early election, enabling the moderates to make their influence felt in Ireland.

Pittman Talks Today

While the committee continues its deliberations on the four-power pact today, the senate debate on the separate treaty between the United States and Japan relating to Yap and other former German islands of the Pacific, Mr. Lodge explained the treaty at length, characterizing it as securing all the rights the United States ever desired in the former German possessions. Senator France, Republican, Maryland, attacked it as a repudiation of the Republican platform pledge to the "league of nations plan," which would lay the foundation for a new world war.
